U.S. INVESTIGATION OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE DEMANDED BY CONGRESSMAN

Britten of Illinois Says Revenue Bureau Names Dry Law Workers Only With Its Sanction.

CHARGES IT FINANCED VOLSTEAD CAMPAIGN

Resolution Indirectly States Two Kansas State Officials Long Have Been on Payroll of Organization.

Post-Dispatch Bureau.
20-23 Wyatt Bldg.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Declaring that the country would be up in arms if industrial and business interests dared to follow the example of the Anti-Saloon League of America in financing congressional campaigns and otherwise seeking to direct legislation, Representative Fred A. Britten (Rep.) of Chicago today introduced a resolution providing for a congressional investigation of the league.

The resolution indirectly charged the league with giving financial support to William H. Anderson, recently released from the New York penitentiary, Justice Richard J. Hopkins of the Kansas Supreme Court and Attorney-General Charles B. Griffith of Kansas, and directly charged that through the league "large sums of money have been used to influence public opinion in various ways wholly unsuspected by the American people, directly to control elections and to pay professional organizers and lobbyists throughout the United States and particularly in the District of Columbia."

In a statement tonight, Britten said:

"If the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs received campaign contributions from shipbuilders who benefited by legislation coming before the Naval Affairs Committee; if the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce received campaign contributions from the American Railway Association; if the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs received contributions from the manufacturers of munitions, and if the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture received contributions from an organization of farmers, the country would rise in arms and these respective legislators would not remain in Congress one week.

Aid to Volstead Charged.

"Yet the Anti-Saloon League, under its religious cloak and the support of the Methodist Church, contributed to Andrew J. Volstead, when he was chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, before which all prohibition legislation comes, and actually 'got away with it!'

"The appropriation of $50,000 for the investigation is a trivial expenditure, when compared with the $18,000,000 it will cost the taxpayers this year to enforce the silly Volstead law and I am sure that an investigation of this character would be of lasting benefit to the country for it would settle the question of whether the Anti-Saloon League was really operating within the law. If it is, it should have no fear of a thorough inquiry by an unprejudiced committee of the Senate and the House."

Following is a summary of the charges enumerated in the resolution:

That the league and its subsidiaries have raised and expended large sums of money, the amounts, sources and expenditure of which have not been made public.

"Misleading and Fraudulent."

That the name Anti-Saloon League is misleading and fraudulent because its purpose is to establish complete prohibition at any cost and not alone to abolish the saloon.

That large sums of money have been expended to influence public opinion by professional organizers and lobbyists.

That the league, its State departments or subsidiaries have openly and flagrantly violated the national campaign contribution law and the corrupt practices law of several states.

That the league paid the campaign expenses of Andrew J. Volstead while he was chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, which passed on the "now famous and thoroughly discredited so-called Volstead law."

That the league has attempted

SAN FRANCISCO DINNER TO BE EATEN WITH FINGERS

Millionaire's Wife Issues Fifty Invitations; Formal Dress, but No Silver on Table.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13.—Fifty invitations have been issued by Mrs. C. C. Moore, wife of a millionaire shipbuilder, to a "finger dinner" at a fashionable downtown hotel on Tuesday. At the dinner, for which formal dress will be worn, no silver will be found upon the tables, and the entire menu will consist of such edibles as can be handled with fingers better than with knives, forks and spoons.

The fare will include caviare eclairs, celery parisienne with salted nuts and ripe olives, cream of asparagus soup in cups), stuffed crab legs with fish sauce (with pastry cups to hold them by), breast of baby chicken with balls of spinach souffle, artichoke hearts with Moulin Rouge dressing, bombe glace in cornucopias, and little cakes.

DRY AGENT AS STUDENT AT UNIVERSITY MAKES ARRESTS

Federal Officer Had Entered Texas School Under Understanding With University Officials.

By the Associated Press.

AUSTIN, Tex., Feb. 13.—Enrolled as a student in the University of Texas, C. E. Brendt, Federal prohibition agent of San Antonio, has obtained evidence on which 10 men are under arrest. Fifteen gallons of liquor are said to have been purchased or confiscated by Brendt during his spare time from his "studies."

Entered under a secret understanding with university officials, Brendt, ostensibly a world war veteran, succeeded in being an all around "student." He made good grades in his work, attended social affairs diligently and was a regular spectator at athletic events.

MERCERSBURG, Pa., Feb. 13. The Charleston has been barred and phonograph playing restricted at Mercersburg Academy, where the sons of President Coolidge formerly were students. While the Charlestoning at the academy has been of the "stag" variety, so vigorous has it been that plaster has been knocked down, floors shaken and carpets damaged, the school authorities said.

HOUSE TO INSIST ON RESTORING TAX ON INHERITANCES

Conferees Also Will Argue to Write Back Into Bill the Levies on Autos, Admissions and Dues.

SENATE'S SURTAX SLASHES ALL RIGHT

Revenue Measure, as Passed by Upper Chamber, Exceeds Treasury Figure on Cut by $100,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—House leaders today served notice that they would insist on restoration to the revenue bill of some of the Federal taxes eliminated by the Senate in cutting more than $125,000,000 below the $330,000,000 total reduction proposed for this year by the House.

Opening of the conferences between representatives of the Senate and House, at which differences will be ironed out, was delayed until Monday pending the printing of the bill as passed by the Senate.

Chairman Fordney of the Finance Committee, who will head the Senate conferees, admitted to President Coolidge today that the Senate had exceeded by at least $100,000,000 the bounds of tax reduction declared possible by the Treasury.

Particularly irksome to House leaders are the decisions of the Senate to eliminate completely the taxes on inheritance, passenger automobiles, theater admissions and lodge dues. These will form the main basis of contention in the conferences and are considered the most likely taxes to be restored to the bill.

Levies to Be Restored.

House spokesmen pointed out that if a 3 per cent automobile tax, as provided by the House, and slightly modified levies on admissions and dues were returned to the bill, it would cut the total amount of reduction for this year by almost $100,000,000 which, it was estimated, would bring the total cut within limits acceptable to the administration. These taxes, reduced by the House, were completely wiped out by the Senate by votes of Democrats and Republican insurgents.

While repeal of the inheritance tax would have no material effect on revenue receipts this year, House leaders have declared they will not yield on the principle that this tax should be continued.

If levies on admissions and dues levy are restored to the bill, it is expected more liberal exemptions will be allowed. The Senate Finance Committee proposed to increase the exemptions to tickets costing 75 cents and less, whereas the exemption now applies only on tickets of 50 cents and less.

Surtax Reductions All Right.

The general feeling prevailed on both sides of the capitol that the $23,000,000 additional reductions provided by increased cuts in the surtax rates applying on incomes between $24,000 and $100,000, as voted by the Senate, would be acceptable. These cuts were made at the insistence of Senate Democrats in the much discussed compromise by which they accepted the 20 per cent maximum surtax figure.

While House spokesmen today rented their wrath on "the wild tax-cutting" engaged in by the Senate, leaders of the Senate took the day off to relax from the strain of the more than two weeks of constant driving which preceded final passage of the bill, 58 to nine, last night.

Predicting that the House conferees would "rigidly insist" on changes in the Senate measure, Representative Tilson of Connecticut, the Republican leader, issued a statement today defending terms of the House bill.

Tilson indorsed personally the repeal of the inheritance, automobile, admissions and dues taxes, but believed such action should wait "until a future date when our financial condition will have been sufficiently improved to warrant such reductions."

Predicts Agreement.

Chairman Green of the House Ways and Means Committee, and Representative Garner of Texas, ranking Democrat on the committee, who will head the House conferees, expressed the opinion the conference would be able to come to a agreement next week.

Senator Smoot announced the conferees would be asked to agree first on the surtax rates and the proposed repeal of the capital stock tax and 1 per cent increase in the 12½ per cent corporation tax. This, he explained, will permit the treasury to have the printers set up the income tax blanks so that printing may be begun immediately upon enactment of the bill.

WOMEN PROTEST AGAINST RULING TO BAR COUNTESS

Petition Objects to Double Standard That Excludes Countess Cathcart and Not the Earl of Craven.

SENATORS AROUSED BY DISCRIMINATION

Inquiry Into State Department's Actions May Be Broadened to Include Immigration Bureau.

COUNTESS AND EARL WILL BE 'ALLOWED' TO SAIL HOME, SAYS THE NEW YORK WORLD

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.

Both the Countess Cathcart and the Earl of Craven, whose elopement to South Africa in 1922 set tongues a-wagging from Mayfair to Park Row, will leave the United States at the earliest possible date, the New York World was reliably informed tonight. This decision is said to have been reached by the Department of Labor in Washington and communicated to the British Ambassador.

According to this information the Countess will not undergo the ordeal of being deported. She will be allowed to sail of her own volition by the first steamship, and probably will be so informed Monday.

Similarly the Earl of Craven will be allowed to sail with his son whom he left in 1922 and not returned to.

This shift in the Cathcart case followed disclosure by Immigration Commissioner Curran at New York that no double standard existed and that he had directed the questioning of the Earl of Craven.

Post-Dispatch Bureau.
20-23 Wyatt Building.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Secretary of Labor Davis received protests today from Senators, Congressmen and women's organizations aroused over the double standard of the immigration laws in holding for deportation the Countess Cathcart on grounds of moral turpitude, while allowing the Earl of Craven, the man in her case, to enter the United States without question.

The fact that immigration officials have called upon the Earl of Craven apparently with an idea of deporting him if he admits his relations with the Countess has not altered the determination of several Senators, including Borah, Johnson, Norris and Copeland, to look into the whole question of morals and social or political censorships by the Government and the question of discriminations.

"I think it is the most outrageous abuse of administrative power I ever heard of," Senator Copeland (Dem.), of New York, exclaimed after seeing Secretary Davis this afternoon. He reported the Secretary as being inclined to the same view, but awaiting complete details from the New York authorities before taking action.

Woman's Party's Protest.

Beginning with the British Ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, and Wilton J. Lambert, Washington attorney, counsel for the Countess, those interested in the case have kept up a constant fire upon Secretary Davis' office to bring about the admission of the Countess or else the deportation of the Earl of Craven with her.

The National Woman's Party, incensed at the double standard aspect of the case, sent a deputation to see Secretary Davis, and presented a protest signed by Alice Paul, Mabel Vernon, Myrtle Cain, Senator A. P. Grogan, Grace Osgood, Anna Thompson Milburn, Abby Scot Baker, Isabelle Vendig, Pauline Clark, Mary Dixon-Willis, Emma Wold and Legare O'Fear.

The protest said:

"On behalf of the National Woman's Party, this delegation comes to you to protest against the action of the immigration authorities in excluding the Countess Cathcart while admitting without question the man involved in the case and while constantly admitting men to our country regardless of their conduct in such matters.

"The National Woman's Party stands unqualifiedly for a single standard of morals and urges you to overrule this decision setting up a moral censorship for women that does not apply to men. There is

STAND OF LUTHERANS ON DRY LAW EXPLAINED

Prof. Theodore Graebner Out of Sympathy With This Kind of Legislation.

Prof. Theodore Graebner of Concordia Seminary, who is one of the foremost preachers and teachers of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, has written an article for the current issue of the Lutheran Witness, published here, on the attitude of the Lutheran Church toward prohibition.

"While ranked solidly on the side of law enforcement," Prof. Graebner wrote, "the Lutheran Church is out of sympathy with the prohibition act and with the entire type of legislation which it represents.

"The Lutheran church holds that everything not forbidden in Scripture is permitted. The churches which have put over prohibition through the political organization, the Anti-Saloon League, hold that nothing is permitted unless specifically authorized in the Bible.

Views at Variance.

"These churches furthermore look upon the State as the secular arm of the church, which shall enforce obedience to church regulations by the policeman's billy and handcuffs. The Kingdom of God, according to these churches, is not 'peace and joy in the Holy Ghost,' but is 'meat and drink,' to be regulated by the police authorities."

Prof. Graebner, in his article, cited instances of the use of liquor by historic leaders of the Reformation, an a later leader, John Wesley.

"John Knox kept 80 gallons of wine in his cellar," Prof. Graebner said. "Calvin received two tuns of wine as part of his yearly salary in Geneva. Martin Luther's wife brewed beer. John Bunyan, in 'Pilgrim's Progress,' represented Christian, on his way to the Celestial City, as stopping frequently to refresh himself with wine. John Wesley, though he condemned brandy as 'liquid fire,' advised ministers to drink a little ale after preaching, and spoke of wine as a precious cordial.

No Abstinence in Bible.

"The Bible does not support the doctrine of total abstinence, for Christ made wine in his first miracle and used wine throughout life, and Paul forbids the passing of judgment on a brother who drinks wine. The wine of their time was fermented wine.

"The saloon never had good standing with the Protestant churches, and its preachers have long inveighed against taverns; but there is no authority for declaring the use of beer and wine in themselves sinful.

"Even if we held different views

DOG PRICES MOUNT WHEN SNOW MOTORS FAIL IN GOLD RUSH

Youth Refuses $75 for Pair of Mongrel Pups; Says He'll Get $200.

By the Associated Press.

WINNIPEG, Man., Feb. 13.—Failure of snow motors has brought on a sudden rise in the price of dog flesh in the Sioux Lockout district. The snow motors, which were to have taken prospectors and supplies to a new gold strike at Red Lake, Ont., proved useless in the slushy districts and had to be abandoned.

Every dog considered in the husky class has been obtained by miners. A youth in the Sioux Lockout district was offered $75 for a pair of mongrel collies.

The youngster declined to sell. "I'll get $200 for them before long," he said.

The district, though to be gold-bearing, is five miles by 10 in area. More than 500 claims have been staked since September.

GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATES NATION-WIDE ALCOHOL RING

Branches in Many Cities, Including St. Louis, It Is Alleged.

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 13.—Reconvening Monday, the Federal grand jury investigating an alleged gigantic bootleg alcohol conspiracy centering around the Superior Industrial Alcohol Co. of Cleveland, will plunge into the inner workings of the alleged syndicate whose operations are said to have included branches in many large cities of the country.

The arrests in the case already number 39, this figure having been reached today when Louis Banks and Isadore Wolke of Minneapolis surrendered to Government agents there. They were released on $20,000 bond, to appear March 5.

District Attorney A. E. Bernstein, in charge of the Government investigation, declares that developments indicate the "syndicate" had subsidiary "rings" in St. Paul, St. Louis, Chicago, Baltimore, Philadelphia, three other Atlantic seaboard centers and as far west as California.

BOY, 5, STRUCK BY AUTO IN FRONT OF HIS HOME

Tony Ivandick, five years old, of 2610 Chouteau avenue, suffered lacerations of the left ear and cheek and possibly a fractured skull yesterday when he was struck in front of his home by an automobile driven by John J. Sale, a clerk, of 926 North Kingshighway oulevard.

He was taken to City Hospital, where his condition was pronounced serious.

MEXICO CLOSING CATHOLIC SCHOOLS

Academy of Visitation in Mexico City One of Group Forced to Suspend.

By the Associated Press.

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 13.—Under orders of the Department of the Interior, the authorities have begun closing various Catholic schools and convents in Mexico City and the suburbs. A recent order allowed 24 hours for the voluntary closing of these institutions.

Among the buildings closed is the Academy of the Visitation in the suburb of Coyoacan, conducted by Sister Margaret H. Semple, formerly of Alabama. She recently called at the American Embassy and discussed the situation with Ambassador Sheffield. The Ambassador brought the matter up in a personal conversation with Foreign Minister Saenz and informed the Secretary of State at Washington, but he made it perfectly clear to the Mexican Foreign Minister that he was not taking the case up formally.

Sister Semple has declined to make a statement for publication. No bishops, ministers or representatives of any Protestant churches thus far have been deported. Newspaper reports persist that foreign Protestants can also be deported but this is not believed in well-informed circles.

The American Ambassador has not made any representations to the Foreign Office regarding the general religious situation here. It is understood that about 50 Spanish priests in Mexico City and vicinity are preparing to depart voluntarily, anticipating deportation.

From six to 10 Spanish priests are being held for deportation, and it is reported that the Spanish Minister does not intend to make further protests in view of the failure of his representations to prevent the recent deportation from Vera Cruz to Havana of Spanish priests. It was originally announced that 10 priests were deported to Havana, but it is now said they numbered 14.

COUNTESS KAROLYI APPEALS

Demands Reasons for Kellogg Barring Her From U. S.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Countess Catherine Karolyi asked the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia today to require Secretary Kellogg to disclose evidence which influences him in reaching the decision to bar her from the United States.

In answering a previous petition by the Countess, Secretary Kellogg merely stated he had evidence warranting his action and that the action was not reviewable by a court because of discretionary powers vested with him.

ROBBER SLAIN, 2 REPORTED WOUNDED AT MADISON

Four Men, Who Line Up 12 Persons in Poolroom and Get $40, Fire on Policemen in Flight.

VICTIM INSTANTLY KILLED IN STREET

The Others, Including Those Believed to Be Injured, Make Their Escape in an Automobile.

One robber was killed and two of his companions were reported wounded by two policemen in a fight following a holdup in the poolroom of A. Snider, at Third street and Madison avenue, Madison, at 11:30 o'clock last night.

There were ten or 12 men in the poolroom when four robbers, armed with pistols, entered the place and backed the men into one corner of the room. Two of them kept the men covered while another looted the cash register of about $40 and the fourth stood at the door.

Meanwhile, a young man passing the place had seen the uplifted hands and realized a holdup was in progress. He ran up the street a block and found Patrolman Ray Bachman and Special Officer Harry Odum, who were patrolling a beat together.

The policemen drew their revolvers and ran to the poolroom in time to meet the four robbers, who were running to a machine at the curb where a fifth man waited.

"We shouted for them to halt and throw up their hands," Special Officer Odum said after the fight. "Instead they opened fire. Bachman and I each had two revolvers and we began shooting as they tried to get to the machine.

"One of the robbers fell in the street and two other staggered. One of them managed to get into the machine and the other fell on the running board. He was dragged into the car by the driver. Bachman and I were still standing in the street shooting when the machine was driven away."

The man who fell in the street had been instantly killed. The machine with the other four was driven toward the McKinley bridge.

ABBY ROCKEFELLER MILTON'S SISTER-IN-LAW IS MARRIED

No One Gives Her Away Because "I Am Not Piece of Baggage," She Says.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Following an engagement of only three weeks, Miss Ellen Hunt Milton, daughter of Mrs. David Merriwether Milton, was married today to Wallace Kirkham Harrison, a young architect.

In contrast with the marriage of Abby Rockefeller, the bride's sister-in-law, the ceremony was simple to the point of plainness. The Rev. Gregory Mabry of North Carolina performed the ceremony at Calvary Baptist Church. The bride was unattended and had no one to give her in marriage. This was her own wish. "I am not a piece of baggage," she explained.

The eight persons present at the ceremony included her mother, her brothers, Albert Fink Milton, David M. Milton and his wife, the former Abby Rockefeller; Mrs. Wilbus Knox Mathews, Mrs. J. Kersley Blackman, Robert Perry Rodgers and Edward J. Mathews.

Zinc Falls $3; Lead $2.50 in Week.

JOPLIN, Mo., Feb. 13.—Prices of both zinc and lead ore declined in the tri-state district this week, zinc bringing $50 as compared with $53 a week ago and lead $117.50, compared with $120 the previous week. Heavy production is given as the cause for the $3 drop in zinc prices. The value of ore sales for the week was $1,567,264.

NEW LUTHERAN CHURCH ORGANIZED OVER LODGE RULE

200 Members of Grace Congregation Here Object to Missouri Synod Edict Against Secret Societies.

29-YEAR-OLD PASTOR WILL BE IN CHARGE

The Rev. A. L. Grewe Resigned Charge at Boonville, Mo., Viewing Stand as Hypocritical.

A constitutional provision of the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church, excluding from its membership those who belong to secret orders, resulted yesterday in the secession of nearly 200 members of Grace Church organization, Garrison and St. Louis avenues. They joined with other Lutherans in establishing a new independent congregation without such a rule.

"Deeply concerned about your souls' salvation, we shall ask the members of our church to pray for you that your faith fail not, and that the good Lord may give you His Spirit to guide your thoughts and actions according to His will."

Thus ended a letter to three leaders of the secession, denying their petition for the right of communion and suffrage, from Rev. W. D. Peters, pastor of Grace Church; John A. Leschen, president of the church and vice president of A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co., and E. Welker, secretary.

Protest By Members.

F. A. Rick, C. H. Chapline and Edwin F. Koncring, who are Masons, acted for 65 former members of Grace Church, and their families, in protesting the refusal of communion to a number of members who belong to secret orders and threatening to withdraw unless given full fellowship. The petition declared the pastor, officers and others had known that many members belonging to secret orders had been partaking of communion.

The church's reply stressed especially the subject of masonry, although members of other lodges are interested. The Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church, which has a membership of about 1,000,000 throughout this nation and abroad, frowns on secret orders in the belief that they teach a theology incompatible with Lutheranism.

The officers of Grace Church told the petitioners: "If such a request be granted by our church, which knows no other God but the Triune (Trinity); which knows no other way to salvation but through faith in Christ Jesus only, the conclusion might justly be drawn that we sanction the worship of free masonry, which does not officially recognize the One Triune God, which does not officially acknowledge Christ Jesus as the Savior of mankind, but which worships an unknown, unrevealed God, and which stands for salvation by works."

The Rev. Mr. Peters' sermon at Grace Church today will be on "Free Masonry." In explanation of the Masonic attitude, F. H. Littlefield, chairman of the Committee on Masonic Information, said last night that Masons are required only to believe in a supreme being and beyond that their faith may be in a Trinity or a monotheistic system; there are no considerations of creed.

Attitude of Congregations.

The petition from the seceders was considered by a business meeting of Grace Church voting members. Other reasons for denying it were: Compliance would violate the Constitutions of the Synod and of the congregation, the latter stating that no one may join the congregation who belongs to "any organization conflicting with the Word of God;" compliance would sever Grace Church from the Synod and offend defenders of true Lutheranism; leniency shown Masons in the congregation in the past was no proof of their right to violate the Constitution.

The church reply added: "In brotherly, Christian love we admonish all that are afflicted with secret orders and who are in sympathy with your letter, if they cannot see the inconsistency between the religion of the lodge and the religion of Crist to be wise, at least to play safe. They need the church of Christ, but they do not need the lodge."

It is the contention of those opposing the synodical rule against secret societies that many lodge members have joined Luther churches in the Synod and church members have joined lodges, with full knowledge of the church, thus making hypocrites of all the church members.

New Pastor Is 29 Years Old.

Faith Evangelical Luther Church of St. Louis is the congregation formed by the secessionists, at Mount Moriah Hall, a Masonic temple, Friday night. It will start holding services at this hall Feb. 28, but expects to have its own home soon, as membership increases. About 60 per cent of the male members belong to various lodges.

The Rev. Alfred L. Grewe, who resigned as pastor of a congregation of the Synod at Boonville, Mo., because he thought the lodge rule was hypocritical, but who belongs to no secret order, is pastor of Faith Church. He is 29 years old and was ordained at Concordia Seminary, of the Synod, St. Louis.

The Rev. F. Pfotenhauer of Chicago, president of the Synod; the Rev. Richard T. Kretschmar, district president, and the Rev. J. H. C. Fritz, dean of Concordia Seminary, declined to comment on the secession.

WOMEN PROTEST AGAINST BARRING TITLED DIVORCEE

nothing in our immigration law authbrizing such discrimination against women. We demand that the law be enforced in a way that does not discriminate against a woman."

La Guardia Writes Davis.

"The exclusion is based on the fact," wrote Representative La Guardia (Socialist) of New York in a letter to Secretary Davis, "that this alien committed adultery with one William George Bradley, fifth earl of Craven, who arrived in the United States on the steamship Belgenland, Nov. 20, 1925. Clearly if the Countess Vera Cathcart is secluded so must be the said William George Bradley with whom she is charged with misconduct.

"We have only one standard of morals in this country. Under the circumstances there is nothing left for the department to do but issue the regular warrant for the apprehension and deportation of the person equally guilty with the alien now under the order of exclusion.

"I know that the Earl's social connections in this country will not prevent a miscarriage of justice."

Senators Borah, Johnson and Norris see the same basic principle at work in this case, as in ex-Secretary Hughes' gagging of Count Karolyi, and Secretary Kellogg's exclusion of the Countess Karolyi and Saklatvala, the Parsee M. P. from London. These Senators said today they wanted to know who asked for the detention and deportation of the Countess Cathcart, and how far the Government is carrying its censorships.

Red Hair and Fundamentalism.

"The next thing," declared Senator Norris, "they'll be keeping out because they don't have red hair, or because they're not fundamentalists. How far does this thing go? I am not condoning the immorality involved here but this sort of thing looks like both tyranny and hypocrisy."

Borah's proposed repeal of the laws under which the State Department claims an arbitrary right to keep out visitors who do not conform to the department's standards is pending before the Foreign Relations Committee and the committee's action promises to broaden into an inquiry into the Labor Department now that the Countess Cathcart's case came to light.

Commissioner of Immigration Husband disclaimed today the responsibility for the initiative against the Countess and likewise disposed of questions as to the reported discrimination in favor of prominent passengers who were allowed to go to a hotel from the Munson liner Munargo without medical inspection when some delay occurred. He said the invariable rule called for medical examination before landing and that exceptions such as reported would not be sanctioned.

Immigration Inspector Sent to Find Earl of Craven.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Exclusion of Countess Cathcart by the immigration authorities while the Earl of Craven, who was named as co-respondent in her husband's divorce suit, remains in New York, has aroused a storm of protest. H. H. Curran, Commissioner of Immigration, said today that he had ordered an immediate investigation of the Earl's case.

An inspector was sent to see the Earl at the address of his uncle, Maj. Bradley Martin, on Park avenue, but he could not be found.

Curran said the Earl would be questioned and information on his case referred to Secretary of Labor Davis. He said the Earl's case was being pressed as rigorously as that of the Countess, and would be thoroughly investigated, no matter what the outcome of hers.

Text of the Law.

A clause in Section 19 of the immigration act of 1917, which covers the exclusion of the Countess on the grounds of admitting "commission of an act involving moral turpitude," covers also the deportation of any alien already in the country "who admits the commission, before entrance, of any felony, or crime involving moral turpitude."

"When the countess," said Curran, "wrote 'D' (meaning divorce) opposite the question 'married or single?' on her landing manifesto, instead of 'M' or 'S' she imposed on the inspector the responsibility of asking questions, which brought the reply that has made it necessary for her case to go before Secretary Davis for discussion.

"In the case of the Earl of Craven the same procedure would naturally not take place, as he is a married man and 'M' would occur on the manifesto in the same place and no questions would be asked."

"I realize now that there was no one at work trying to keep me out," Lady Cathart said today. At her own request she was permitted to see reporters on Ellis Island.

"Premium on Lying."

"I was my own worst enemy. By telling the truth I have gotten myself here. It does put rather a premium on lying.

"I shall stay here if I am allowed to," she said. "Moral turpitude does seem a hard word for an act committed in sincerity and at no time regretted. Adultery is not a crime in England; if it were all of the English nobility would be in jail. And if England had the same entrance laws as America, I don't think some American women would get in."

Of her visit to Ellis Island, the Countess had no complaints to make. "I have been wonderfully treated," she said. "Comfortable room and a nice bath to myself, good food, and plenty of chance to see my friends and all the communication I wanted with the outside world. Ellis Island strikes me as spotlessly clean and most comfortable, and the officials have been kindness itself—all quite different from the English newspaper accounts."

For occupation while she waits for the decision in her case, the Countess has been working to finish her most recent novel. Two already have been published in England. The latest is called "Who Shall Judge?" she said, and laughed. "It's rather good, isn't it?"

PENALTY FOR ELKS TO CLOSE ENTIRE BUILDING

Grand Ruler So Interprets 15-Day Suspension Order, Effective Tomorrow.

The St. Louis Elks Club, 3619 Lindell boulevard, will be closed tomorrow and will remain closed for 15 days.

The suspension order issued Feb. 6 was definitely interpreted last night by Judge William H. Atwell, grand exalted ruler of the Elks. Local officials had maintained that it applied only to lodge rooms and lodge meetings. The club rooms, they thought, would remain open as usual. But a query by the Post-Dispatch to Judge Atwell, now in New York, brought the reply: "All lodge activities, including club rooms, suspended."

Jules Bertero, secretary of the club, had not heard the news last night. "The order will become effective Monday," he said. "We are awaiting an interpretation from Judge Atwell as to what activities it will affect."

The suspension order was announced by Judge Atwell Feb. 6 as the result of a raid by Federal prohibition agents on the club early New Year's eve. The raid followed the alleged purchase of whisky by enforcement agents from a Negro waiter. Nearly all the liquor seized was labeled with the name of the owner and apparently had been brought to the club for the New Year's celebration. However, charges of violation of the Volstead law were issued against five persons—Arthur H. Kuhlman, president of the club; Bertero, Sebastian Pedroli, steward; Julius Berryman, a Negro waiter, and James K. Johnoff, a member.

LUTHERANS' STAND ON THE DRY LAW IS EXPLAINED

on the matter of drinking, we would not favor prohibitory legislation. There is a distinction between sin and crime, and the church may not ask the state to declare as a crime all those things which it holds to be sins. A noted British jurist, on being told that Christianity was part and parcel of English law, replied, 'Were you ever employed to draw an indictment against a man for not loving his neighbor as himself.' So we view this legislation as a violation of the constitutional separation of church and state. The first amendment to the Constitution had to be annulled to put over the eighteenth."

Official View of Church.

Prof. Graebner said his statement represented the official view of the Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, as formally expressed in various gatherings within recent years. The Missouri Synod includes a large part of the United States and extends to several other countries, the name being a historical rather than a geographical one.

Dean J. H. C. Fritz of Concordia Seminary expressed substantial concurrence with Prof. Graebner's views. "The Lutheran Church holds that the law, being on the statute books, must be obeyed," he said, "but we do not believe in trying to legislate people into righteousness. The practical workings of prohibition have shown that such an effort is bound to fail."

Prof. Graebner said that, so far as he knew, the Lutheran clergy in St. Louis unanimously supported such sentiments as he had expressed. Dean Fritz said he knew of no Lutheran minister here who held a contrary opinion.

Some Taxes Repealed by Senate Likely to Be Written Back Into Bill to Amount of $100,000,000

Smoot Indicates White House Influence Will Be Exerted to Restore Certain Sections—Norris Assails "Millionaires' Measure"

By PAUL Y. ANDERSON,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—After a visit at the White House today, Chairman Smoot of the Senate Finance Committee declared the Senate had reduced taxes $100,000,000 more than the Treasury could stand, and ventured the opinion that the reductions of $456,261,000, provided in the bill which passed the Senate Friday night would be considerably diminished before the House and Senate conferees get through with them. In other words, the next job is to reduce the reductions.

Smoot's statement was taken to indicate that President Coolidge felt the Senate's action was entirely too much of a good thing, and that it had carried out his reduction program not wisely, but too well. It reduced taxes $156,261,000 more than he and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon had recommended. Smoot's announcement seemed to leave no doubt that the White House influence would be exerted to have some of the repealed provisions restored.

However, to remove taxes is one thing, and to replace them is a different and infinitely less pleasant thing. It is painful politically to those who restore them, and it is painful financially to those who thought themselves rid of them.

Which Taxes to Restore.

The question, of course, is which taxes to restore. Those taxes which the Senate repealed against the wishes of the administration were the taxes on automobiles and trucks and on admissions and dues. These "nuisance taxes" were unpopular, and their repeal undoubtedly was popular. That was one reason they were singled out. Yet the natural course of the administration would be to endeavor to restore them.

The House conferees are expected to take a different view. The House reduced the inheritance taxes, but the Senate repealed them, notwithstanding a bitter and sustained attack from the progressive group. Sentiment in the House is said to be strongly in favor of a retention of some measure of inheritance taxes, and there is every indication that the House conferees will put up a vigorous fight for them.

Some House leaders already have taken the stand that the country will never stand for the complete repeal of the taxes on the swollen estates of dead millionaires.

Unfortunate for Comparison.

They feel that it would be particularly unfortunate to repeal such taxes, and then insist that automobiles, movies and football games must be taxed to provide government revenue.

The loss in revenue through the repeal of the inheritance taxes was vastly larger than the revenue which would be provided by the admissions and dues taxes. It is considerably larger than the reappealed tax on automobiles.

Senator Norris (Rep.) of Nebraska, who led the fight on the bill by endeavoring to retain the estate tax and the publicity clause and by opposing the drastic reductions in surtaxes on incomes of more than $100,000 a year—all without success—today took a parting shot by making public the following summary and analysis of the bill as it finally passed the Senate:

"The bill is a millionaires' tax bill, as any examination of its provisions will disclose.

"It reduces the personal income tax of 5694 persons reporting incomes of $100,000 and more by $120,500,000.

$90,000,000 for the Living.

"It reduces the estate tax of all persons with $100,000 of net income while they were alive by $90,000,000.

1924 for the same class of persons who had incomes of $100,000 or more while alive by $60,000,000.

"It reduces the estate tax of This is a retroactive gift to millionaires' estates and in effect is the same as if we took the money out of the Treasury by direct appropriation.

"It reduces the gift tax for all persons with incomes of $100,000 or more by $4,500,000.

"It wipes out the estate tax for all future time, and this tax would be paid to the greatest extent by the same class of taxpayers, and incidentally reduces the income of the Government by more than $100,000,000 a year from estate tax repeal.

"The total tax reduction, then, for these 5694 persons with incomes of $100,000 or more is $275,000,000.

"There were approximately 4,085,555 taxpayers with incomes of less than $100,000. For this class of taxpayers the reductions amount to $201,500,000.

Cuts for $100,000 Incomes.

"The average tax reduction give by this bill to persons with incomes of $100,000 and more is $48,000 each.

"The average reduction for persons with incomes of less than $10,000 is $49 each.

"The bill continues the secrecy provisions of the income tax law, under which all the frauds against the Government discovered by the select committee of the Senate were committed. It continued the secrecy clause to protect any future and comparable frauds which might develop, and secrecy is always an nducemen to fraud of one character or another.

"The bill gives a subsidy to the oil industry, estimated as high as $40,000,000 a year. The oil industry, criticised by the consumers for the high prices charged for gasoline and crude oil, is now told by this bill to deduct 50 per cent of its net income before it pays any tax at all. According to estimates given by the counsel for the select committee of the Senate, this bill tells the oil industry that 50 per cent of the net income is tax exempt. There is no comparable exemption for the farmer, the business man, the professional man and the individual other than the exemption allowed an individual on earned income."

ANTHRACITE MINERS PREPARE FOR WORK

Era of Good Feeling Prevails in Coal Fields—Ratification Regarded as Formality.

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 13.—An era of good feeling prevailed today in the hard coal fields, following upon the settlement of the long and costly strike. From every city and hamlet came the word that the miners were eagerly waiting for the hundreds of colliery whistles to call them back to work. All the bitterness engendered by the industrial struggle has disappeared.

The first work will start next Wednesday or Thursday and coal will be rolling to exhausted markets in the speediest time possible. The exact time of resuming work will depend upon the ratification of the peace compact by the tri-district convention of miners which meets at Scranton next Tuesday. Ratification is regarded as a formality.

The work of getting the mines in readiness proceeded rapidly today. Extra maintenance men were pressed into service to aid the 8000 who have guarded the properties since the strike started. Generally, the mines were reported to be in fair condition.

Already hundreds of workers who left the fields to engage in other occupations during the suspension are coming back to their homes. When the strike began, 158,000 miners became idle. The full force will be unable to return to their employment at first, but it was agreed that a very high percentage of the men would be on hand. Industrially, the region began to find itself again and anxious merchants smiled for the first time in weeks.

Philadelphia was deserted as a center of mining interest today. With the exception of John L. Lewis and Philip Murray, president and vice president of the United Mine Workers, all members of the Joint Committee had left for their homes. The miners' officials will remain here until Monday when they will go to Scranton for the convention. Lewis will preside and explain the terms of the agreement.

Mining officials as well as operators expressed satisfaction that they were able to settle the strike without Government or State intervention. They unqualifiedly gave the credit for the settlement to Richard F. Grant of Cleveland, who conducted the delicate negotiations that brought both sides together. Grant left the city today.

Long Period of Peace Expected in Coal Mining.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Secretary of Labor Davis sent the following telegram today to J. H. Zerbey, editor of the Pottsville, Pa., Republican:

"I am very happy that the anthracite strike has been settled. Great credit is due R. F. Grant of Cleveland, O., vice president of the M. A. Hanna Coal Co., with large interests in both the anthracite and bituminous coal fields for his splendid assistance in connection with the final settlement reached at Philadelphia, yesterday. I look forward to a long period of industrial peace and prosperity in the anthracite region."

GIRL'S CHARGE LANDS BERGDOLL IN GERMAN JAIL

He Is Held at Mosbach, Baden, After Investigation by Private Detective.

By the Associated Press.

MOSBACH, Baden, Germany, Feb. 13.—Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, war time United States draft evader, was arrested today in a hotel in the village of Hueffenhardt, once the home of his mother, Mrs. Emma C. Bergdoll of Philadelphia, and lodged in the Mosbach jail.

He was taken on the complaint of a private detective named Sachs, said to be a German-American, who alleges that three years ago Bergdoll wronged a girl in Heidelberg. The police, who are holding Bergdoll on an open charge while investigating the accusations against him, refused to divulge the name and age of the girl, but Sachs has undertaken to produce here to substantiate his allegation.

The detective, who now lives in Frankfort-on-Main, has been making an investigation regarding Bergdoll in this neighborhood, but his motives have not been fully disclosed. The police said today they believed the complaint was backed by persons desiring to be revenged against Bergdoll for his killing of one member of a party which tried to kidnap him at Eberbach on Aug. 11, 1923, and wounding another.

Villagers in this district assert that they have overheard Sachs saying "I'll get something on Bergdoll yet."

The former Philadelphian and draft dodger was arrested early this morning and brought to Mosbach in a police patrol wagon.

FREE THINKERS GO TO COURT OVER RELIGION IN SCHOOLS

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 13.—The right of public schools to release pupils during school hours to attend classes in religious instruction was under fire here today at a hearing before Justice Ellis J. Staley in Supreme Court. No conclusion was reached but four weeks time was granted for exchange of briefs and filing of replies.

Schools in 130 cities and villages in the state, including those of New York City, are said to be involved. The hearing was an action brought by the Free Thinkers' Society of New York against Dr. Frank P. Graves, State Commissioner of Education, seeking a writ to require the commissioner to order local school authorities to stop the releasing of children from school to attend such classes.

Arthur Garfield Hayes of New York, of counsel for the Free Thinkers' society, charged that allowing children to leave school to attend classes in religious education was "an attempt on the part of the Christians to bootleg religion into the schools."

The same principle is involved, he said, as that in the Scopes evolution trial in Tennessee.

The Free Thinkers hold that religious instruction during school hours, although not given in the schools and not compulsory, is in violation of the constitution principle of religious freedom. Under the plan of religious instruction classes in vogue in the schools of the state, parents are given the right of selecting the denomination under which the child shall be taught. Pupils not attending any religious classes are required to remain in school.

HOUSE APPROVES $50,000,000 BILL FOR RIVER WORK

Also Agrees to $18,000,000 for Aviation, and Flood Control on Mississippi Is Given $10,000,000.

INVESTIGATION OF ARMY THREATENED

Resolution to Be Pressed Unless Senate Restores Non-Commission Grades to Military Measure.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13. — The House virtually completed consideration of the Army appropriation bill today, approving $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors, $18,050,000 for aviation, and funds to maintain the Army, National guard and organized reserves at their present strength. Final vote on the measure was deferred until Tuesday.

While the bill was being discussed, Representative Bacon (Rep.), of New York announced that he was drafting a resolution for investigation into the condition of the Army, and would press it unless the Senate restored the positions of several thousands of non-commissioned officers which otherwise would be abolished by the Army measure.

"These non-commissioned officers and privates first class," said Bacon, "are the backbone of the army. To fail to appropriate money to continue them in rank would be a severe blow to the national defense. It would take away any incentive for a man to enlist, as there would be practically no opportunity for promotion."

The appropriation approved today for rivers and harbors—$10,000,000 higher than last year—is to provide for inland waterway development and surveys. The house agreed to two additional items for flood control, $10,000,000 for the Mississippi River and $400,000 for the Sacramento River.

Consideration of sections allotting funds for national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers provoked a sharp debate, in which the subsistence provided in these institutions was attacked.

Representative Anthony (Rep.), of Kansas, chairman of the appropriations sub-committee in charge of the bill, denied that veterans were supplied food of poor quality. He said a personal inspection of a number of institutions had convinced him that they were properly administered.

SUIT TO PREVENT MERGER OF CHAIN STORE SYSTEMS

Government Seeks to Enjoin National Food Products Corporation From Further Stock Purchase.

SECOND SIMILAR ACTION IN WEEK

Firm Had Acquired Substantial Holdings and U. S. Charged Restraint of Trade Would Follow.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—The United States Government moved today to prevent what it regards as an attempt to convert the chain store system into linked fetters for the restraint of trade and commerce.

United States District Attorney Buckner filed an equity suit in Federal court to enjoin the National Food Products Corporation from obtaining further stock in competing food corporations, and to require the corporation to dispose of its present holdings in such concerns.

The suit today was the snag upon which the third great proposed combine in America's $22,000,000,000 food industry was caught. It followed within a few days a similar anti-trust action against the proposed $2,000,000,000 Ward Food Products corporation, and the collapse of negotiations for a $250,000,000 combination of the Postum Cereal Company and the California Packing Company, generally attributed to fears of meeting government disapproval.

Contentions of Government.

The district attorney charged that the National Food Products Corporation, a holding corporation recently formed, through acquisition of capital stock in other corporations which operate more than 16,000 stores throughout northeastern United States, would lessen competition, restrain trade, and create a monopoly of one or more lines of commerce. The total capital of such companies is in excess of $160,000,000.

Unlike the proposed Ward combination, however, the National corporation did not plan to take full control of its constituent companies, nor did it contemplate a merger of the properties. In the official announcement of its formation, made here on Feb. 2, it was explained that bankers and prominent food merchants had organized the corporation along familiar lines of public utility holding companies, and that its activities would be to purchase, sell, own and underwrite securities of concerns engaged in the food trade.

Interests Acquired.

Substantial interests were acquired at that time in the following companies:

H. C. Bohack company, operating about 350 retail grocery stores in the New York Metropolitan district.

James Butler company, operating 300 retail grocery stores in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

United States Stores Corporation, operating 1050 retail grocery and meat stores in New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Pennsylvania and the New England States.

David Pender Grocery Co., operating 245 grocery stores in North Carolina and Virginia.

First National Stores, Inc., operating 1640 chain groceries, in New England.

Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., operating 13,000 retail grocery stores throughout the United States.

In addition stock holdings were acquired in the United States Dairy Corporation, Abbotts Alderney Dairies, Inc., the Borden company, the Reid Ice Cream Co. and the National Dairy Products Corporation.

Nine Individuals Named.

Nine individuals, all officers and directors of the National Food Products Corporation, were named with the corporation as defendants. They were: H. C. Bohack, president of the H. C. Bohack Co., Inc.; C. C. Burdan, president of Burdan Brothers; L. Benedict, vice president of the Worcester Salt Co.; B. F. Halsey, vice president of Sheffield Farms, Inc., also a director of the National Dairy Products; and J. A. MacDermott, vice president of the United States Dairy Products Corporation.

Buckner cited that the original capitalization of the National Corporation was $2000, and that the purposes for which it was incorporated originally were: "To buy and sell food products." Later, the District Attorney complained, the corporation's capital was placed at 1,000,000 shares each of class A and class B common stock, which at the price of an initial offering of shares, would be equivalent to $45,000,000. Simultaneously the functions of the corporation were greatly enlarged, to include the practices of which the District Attorney complained in his suit.

Forty thousand units of the class A and class B stock were sold recently for a total of $1,800,000, payments for which become due next Monday. Buckner said one object for pressing the suit at this time was to test the legality of the alleged combination before the public had parted with its money.

Clayton Act Violation.

The complaint filed by the District Attorney dealt at length with the growth of chain stores system, and charged that if these, in turn, were permitted by the Government to consolidate through interlocking directorates, "an important voice in the management of corporations engaged in interstate trade and commerce in various parts of the United States in the production, sale and distribution of foodstuffs will be centered in a small group of persons."

This, he charged, was in violation of the provisions of the Clayton act.

Buckner declared that prior to 1905 groceries universally were sold throughout the country through independent local retail stores, but that since then the chain store system had expanded until 60,000 of a total of 360,000 retail stores in the United States are chain stores. Of this number, he said, 16,000 were operated and controlled by corporations in which the National Food Products Corporation had acquired stock.

Executives of the National corporation declined to comment on the suit, but said they would issue a statement explaining their position.

JAMES A. STILLMAN SAYS HE IS THROUGH WITH BUSINESS

Going to Spend Rest of Life Quietly, Former Banker Asserts in Paris.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and the Chicago Daily News. Copyright 1926.

PARIS, Feb. 13.—"I am through with active business." That was the statement made today by James A. Stillman, former head of the National City Bank, at the Small Hotel in Passy, a fashionable suburb of Paris where he and Mrs. Stillman are staying. They are now under their own names, having abandoned incognito.

"I am going to spend the rest of my life quietly," Stillman added, "far from the limelight of publicity which has honored me too much in the last few years."

The former banker rubbed his hands and made no effort to conceal his happiness. He seems unlikely to be able to start his retirement from the limelight immediately. Mrs. Stillman did not seem to mind the reporters and photographers who swarmed about them. "It's terrible," she said, laughing. "It's like being royalty."

DOUBT THAT PRISONER IS FUGITIVE MURDERER

Danville (Ill.) Police Skeptical of Confession and Identity of Suspect.

By the Associated Press.

DANVILLE, Ill., Feb. 13.—Luke O'Neill, held here following his confession that he killed Catherine Gore, New York cabaret singer, in that city last September, sullenly refused tonight to furnish any information concerning his life, or of the Chicago surgeon who, he claimed yesterday, made over his face in order to perfect a disguise.

He was told that the truthfulness of his confession was doubted. He replied that he did not want his mother to learn of his predicament and would therefore maintain silence.

Comparisons of fingerprints taken here, with those on the New York police bulletin tonight, showed no resemblance, but this might be due to the blurry impression taken here.

These facts, together with the growing belief that the difference in appearance between his picture on the police bulletin and that taken here, could not be accounted for by any plastinic surgery, causes local authorities to doubt his story. He was arrested here on a charge of transporting an automobile that had been stolen from Jack Robertson, 3863 A Shenandoah avenue, St. Louis, on Feb. 8.

Later tonight the prisoner answered several questions. Reminded that New York detectives who knew O'Neill were expected to arrive here Sunday and would expose him if he were not telling the truth he exclaimed: "Yes, they'll know me. There's no doubt about that."

TIJUANA CLEANUP IS ORDERED AFTER ATTACKS ON GIRLS

Mayor Acts to Close Border Dives Following Self-Destruction of Outraged Americans.

PRISONER TRIES TO END LIFE IN JAIL

Foiled, He Declares Hunger Strike—Speedy Trials for Seven Accused Men Promised.

By the Associated Press.

TIJUANA, Lower California, Feb. 13.—Luis Amador, Tijuana saloonkeeper, charged jointly with Chief of Police Zenaido Llansos with attacking the Misses Clyde and Audrey Peteet, after being thwarted in an attempt to kill himself today, announced his intention of going on a hunger strike. Amador slashed one of his wrists with a safety razor blade before the jailer discovered his act and took the blade from him.

The prisoner declared he would eat no food. The authorities said his mind probably was affected.

Final depositions of the seven men prisoners, held in connection with the attack on the American girls, which resulted in a death pact, in which the girls and their mother and father killed themselves, were taken today. These depositions correspond to a cross-examination. Informations will be presented against the prisoners in the Mexican court at once, according to Plutarco Gallegos, Deputy Attorney-General of the Republic of Mexico, who is directing the case against the men.

The charges will include several counts, chief of which will be abduction and criminal attack. This is the most serious of the charges as it may carry the death penalty. Gallegos would not say, however, whether he would ask for the extreme death penalty.

Mayor Frederico Palacio, of Tijuana is organizing his forces for a clean-up in accordance with express orders from President Calles to Palacio, who assumed control of Tijuana last January, when it was made a municipality, said that every questionable resort would be padlocked.

"Low dives in Tijuana must go," he said. "I am preparing to act vigorously and by March 1 not a questionable resort will remain."

The Oakland bar, owned by Amador, where the Peteet girls are said to have been drugged and abducted, has been closed already.

As a result of the outrage on the Feteet girls, business here has fallen off 40 per cent, both at the race track and at the concessions. Sentiment south of the border is strongly in favor of punishment of the men.

However, a large poster was recently issued with a headline, "These men are Mexicans," referring to the accused men. The poster makes a plea for fair play for the accused men.

PRIMATE OF POLAND DIES

Cardinal Dalbor Was Conspicuous Figure During World War.

By the Associated Press.

WARSAW, Feb. 13.—The death is announced of Edmond Cardinal Dalbor, archbishop of Gnesenposen and primate of Poland. He was 67 years old. He will be buried in the Cathedral of Gneizno (Gnesen), where nearly 1000 yeags ago Boleslaus I, Poland's first king, was crowned by Emperor Otto III.

Cardinal Dalbor became conspicuous during the World War. He was received by Emperor William at German army headquarters and in his first Episcopal letter exhorted his flock to watch and pray. He made no allusion to Germany or Russia and simply said God's intentions would be carried out. When Poland was invaded by the Germans he urged the clergy to invest in German war loans, and in a message to Emperor William thanked him for granting Poland autonomy which she later obtained, but from the Allies, not Germany.

U. S. AGENTS PLAN BOOTLEG DRIVE IN MADISON COUNTY

R. J. Merrick, Chief Aid to Yellowley Discusses Cleanup Campaign on Arrival in E. St. Louis.

LIQUOR MURDER CLEW SOUGHT IN RAID

Dismanteled Still Found in St. Louis County — Deputy's Badge Taken From Him.

Plans for a drive on bootleggers in Madison County were discussed in East St. Louis yesterday, following the arrival of R. Q. Merrick, first assistant to Prohibition Administrator E. C. Yellowley of Chicago.

Recent disclosures of conditions in Madison County, particularly in connection with the Hockett-Bolke murders of ten days ago, were responsible for the decision to begin a Federal cleanup campaign there. The County is in the Chicago district beyond the jurisdiction of L. H. Breuer, administrator at St. Louis.

Acting on a tip that members of a Madison County moonshiners' gang also was operating in St. Louis County, a party of policemen, Federal dry agents and county deputies yesterday raided a farm on Gibson road, 300 yards east of Bellefontaine road.

The possibility that some evidence bearing upon the murders of Constable Ohmer Hockett and John Balke at Horseshoe Lake 10 days ago might be unearthed in the county raid had been suggested to Deputy Prohibition Administrator Dillon.

The raiders found a still of 300-gallon capacity under the floor of a shed. It was dismantled and a 10,000-gallon vat in the farm-yard was empty. On the river bank east of the farm, the raiders came upon the chassis of a large automobile buried in the mud but were unable to discover any mark to identify it.

Two Men Held.

Two men who said they were Leo Palazzolo and Joe Rebella were arrested charged with possession of materials for the manufacture of liquor. They denied any knowledge of the still.

The Madison County Bankers' Association will meet this week, it was learned authoritatively, to discuss conditions in the county as emphasized by the murders of Hockett and Balke. The protective committee of the association has met twice during the past week and has discussed an investigation either by Federal authorities or by a grand jury under the direction of the Attorney-General's office.

Sheriff Deimling of Madison County yesterday took up the badge of W. C. Wiemers of Wood River, one of his deputies who said in an interview in the Post-Dispatch Friday that the County Board of Supervisors of which Wiemers is a member, was determined to get to the bottom of the situation in the county.

This statement was supplemental to a resolution passed by the board criticising county officers for lack of activity in pursuing an investigation of the Hockett-Balke killings. Wiemers was ordered to appear at the Sheriff's office at Edwardsville tomorrow morning presumably for an explation of his remarks.

The inquest into the deaths of Hockett and Balke will be resumed tomorrow evening at Edwardsville. Newspaper reporters and Department of Justice Agent Dowd will be among those summoned as witnesses, it has been announced.

Loses Spectacular Court Fight to Escape Gallows

Entire Supreme Tribunal in Chambers Reviews Slayer's Case and Execution Is Delayed 40 Minutes.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13. — The Supreme Court of the United States stepped outside tradition today to hear the final, hopeless appeal of a condemned murderer, spending his last hours in a death cell 3000 miles away.

The supplicant was Harry Garbutt, who later paid the penalty for his crime on the gallows in San Quentin prison, California. His sole spokesman in Washington was an official of the court, C. Elmore Cropley, a deputy clerk. It was Chief Justice Taft who finally cast precedents aside, halted the procedure of the highest tribunal and presented to the full court in chambers the question whether there had been a perversion of justice.

The step was the more remarkable in that a majority of the Justices, including the Chief Justice himself already had heard Garbutt's plea in private and found it without merit. In the end, the nine members of the court were unanimous in deciding not to intervene to stay the execution.

It was upon a slender technicality of the laws of California that the condemned man pinned his spectacular fight. His attorney, Ernest Spagnoli, contended that a date for Garbutt's execution had been set in his absence from court, under a provision of the California statutes which would not bear the test of constitutionality.

The lawyer himself did not come to the capital to present the plea, but forwarded it by mail. It first was presented yesterday to Justice Sutherland, who is assigned to the Pacific circuit. He found the question raised already had been settled in another California case and declined to issue the stay which any individual member of the tribunal could grant. Subsequently Chief Justice Taft and Justices Sanford, Stone and Brandeis confirmed the refusal.

Only an hour remained before the time set for the execution in San Quentin this morning when the deputy clerk risked a last resort. He cleared a telegraph wire to California, entered the council chamber of the court and laid the papers before the Chief Justice. Such a procedure never had been known to the oldest of the court's officials. But the Justices stopped their discussion of opinions to review the plea.

Ex-Convict Made Confession, Prison Officials Say.

By the Associated Press.

SAN QUENTIN, Cal., Feb. 13.—Harry Garbutt, Los Angeles murderer, was hanged at the state prison here today.

Last minute court appeals held up the execution for 40 minutes. Prison officials said that Garbutt made a full confession of guilt last night.

Garbutt shot and killed Mrs. Dorothy Lee Hunn, his benefactress, in a holdup of her Pasadena home. As Harry Connors, Garbutt served 36 months in the Joliet penitentiary in Illinois for a burglary. He was paroled. He was 39 years old.

EX-'KLEAGLE' CLARKE STARTS A NEW ORDER

Busy Organizing Anti-Evolutionists in "Supreme Kingdom" at $10 Per.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 13. — Edward Young Clarke, the supersalesman who made the Ku Klux Klan prominent and profitable, is now selling allegiance to "Old-Time Religion" at $10 a head. His go-getters are back on the trail of the Protestant whites of the South, vending membership in the "Supreme Kingdom" partnership in a drive to confound the encroaching forces of religious liberalism and evolutionary doctrine.

The last three years have been comparatively lean for Clarke. Thrown into the discard with Col. W. J. Simmons, the klan's founder, when H. W. Evans seized control of the order, Clarke no longer gets $2.50 from the $10 fee of each newly dubbed knight. He has promoted various projects of late, but none of them has succeeded.

A large ape, grimacing in a show window in the heart of Atlanta's business district, for a time marked the headquarters of the "Supreme Kingdom, Castle No. 1." Here the erstwhile "imperial kleagle" holds forth.

The avowed purpose of the Supreme Kingdom is to eliminate teaching of the theory of evolution in schools and colleges of the United States. It also purposes to keep out of public office any man who does not pass its test as a fundamentalist and anti-evolutionist.

A "national conference of anti-evolutionists" has been called to meet in Atlanta March 16 and a state convention of the Supreme Kingdom is planned for the same date to begin an intensive membership drive in Georgia.

NEW YORKERS CRASH GATE TO GET COKE; MANY INJURED

Crowd Has Carts, Sleds, Baby Carriages for Fuel; Riot Call Turned In.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—A riot call for police was sent out today when hundreds of men, women and children, seeking fuel, stormed the coke yards of the Consolidated Gas Co. Scores were injured before the police could quell the disturbance.

Hearing that there was to be a sale of coke at the yards, people came from every direction, dragging carts and sleds or pushing baby carriages. The gates to the yard were barred and soon men, women and children were shouting "Open the gates."

Officers of the company made futile efforts to persuade the crowd to disperse. Finally with a great surge the crowd rushed the gates and crashed them open.

A sergeant and six policemen who arrived on the scene a short time later persuaded the people to leave. Many were forced to abandon the fuel they had gathered up.

After order had been restored the seekers of fuel were formed in long lines and a bushel of coke sold to each for 30 cents. Most of the persons injured were hurt in fights among themselves.

FOUR COUNTRIES WANT SEATS ON LEAGUE COUNCIL

Germany Threatens to Withdraw Application if She Is Not Awarded Permanent Place.

ASSEMBLY MEETS ON ISSUE MARCH 8

Spain, Portugal and Brazil Also Insist on Membership—Brazil Wants Chair Held for U. S.

By the Associated Press.

GENEVA, Feb. 13.—With an extraordinary League of Nations assembly summoned for March 8 to consider Germany's application for membership, a situation has arisen which may involve remodeling of the league.

The council, which issued the assembly call at its brief session yesterday, decided that the assembly should not only vote on Germany's application, but should also consider any proposal made by the March session of the council regarding the council's membership.

Spain desires that nations which remained neutral in the World War shall have a permanent place in the deliberations of the council, while Brazil is anxious that she or some other country of the American continent should take the vacant seat of the United States until that country signifies its desire to occupy it. Likewise Poland also would welcome a permanent seat.

To those who had hoped to confine the election of permanent membership to Germany there was surprise when Spain, Poland and Brazil came out in the open with virtual demands for such seats and the belief prevailed that other states were likely to advance their candidates at a later date.

Claims Partiality to Europe.

Senor Afranio Mello Franco, the Brazilian delegate, asserted that Brazil would accept, temporarily, the seat given the United States under the covenant of the league. He called attention to the fact that when Germany was elected a member, Europe, out of the 25 members of the league, would have four permanent seats in the council, whereas Latin America, with a membership of 19, as yet had no seat. There were two non-permanent places belonging to Latin America on the council, but the hazards of election might cause the loss of these, when it was conceivable Latin America would be without any voice whatsoever in the council. This would be fatal to the league as it would wreck its international charfacter, he said.

Advices from Stockholm are to the effect that some of the Swedish newspapers, including the Social Demokraten, the Government organ, express the belief that demands for an increase in the number of permanent seats in the council, made at the expense of other members, must be opposed. It is contended by the press of the Swedish capital that such concessions by the council would be against the interest of smaller states without permanent seats, and would make it appear that the league was trying to bring about a counter-balance to Germany. This, one of the Stockholm papers asserts, would in nowise express the spirit of Locarno.

Unanimous Support Required.

Some suspicion is reported to have been aroused in London that Sir Austen Chamberlain, the British Foreign Secretary, has given some sort of promise to Premier Briand of France favorable to the aspirations of Spain, Brazil and Poland for permanent seats on the council. The Liberal press is said to be showing anxiety with regard to the Government's policy in the premises and this has been heightened by the evasive answers of Sir Austen, made in the House of Commons on the subject.

While Germany is said to see no reason to believe there can be any doubt to her right to a seat, she is seeking to be informed whether the council will award seats to other nations in addition to Germany. If Germany is denied a seat, it is said, she will immediately withdraw her application.

The allocation of new seats must be supported unanimously by the present council of 10 members and ratified by a majority of the league's assembly. Therefore, a period of intense canvassing is expected. England's attitude is being awaited with much interest, for it is that country alone which can block everything.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Feb. 13.—France will support vigorously Poland's application for permanent membership on the League of Nations' Council, it is stated in official circles. She will also look favorably upon such increase in the membership of the council as will make a permanent place for South America.

Czecho-Slovakia and Spain are understood to be candidates for permanent seats, and the French representative on the council probably will favor the addition of four such places to satisfy the ambitions of all.

ZEIGLER MINE RIOT TRIAL RESULTS IN 8 CONVICTIONS

Five Acquitted to Assault to Murder Union Officer Who Opposed Strike.

BENTON, Ill., Feb. 13.—After seven hours of deliberation, the jury in the trial of 13 Zeigler miners who were charged with an assault to murder D. B. Cobb, vice-president of Subdistrict No. 9, District No. 12, U. M. W. A., in an unauthorized strike on the night of Aug. 11, last, returned a verdict in Circuit Court today finding eight of the accused men guilty and acquitting the remaining five.

The convicted are: Henry Corbishley, 41 years old; Frank Corbishley, 29; Stanley Paurez, 33; Ignatz Simmich, 26; Martin Simmich, 38; Mike Karadich, 45; Eddie Maleski, 19, and Steve Meanavich, 36. Charles Corbishley, Pete Blazen, Marion Sojat, Matt Cencavich and William Bartash were acquitted.

The charges grew out of a riot in Liberty Hall at Zeigler following a meeting called by sub-district President Lon Fox to get the miners of local union No. 992 to elect new officers to take the place of President Henry Corbishley and others who were deposed for calling a "wild cat" strike at Bell & Zoller Mine No. 1 when a difference between miners and operators over the weight of coal arose.

Cobb, the evidence showed, was beaten over the head and body with chairs and blackjacks as he attempted to leave the hall after the meeting broke up.

One man, Matt Saravich, died as a result of a shot fired during the fight and Hezza Hindman, sub-district board member, received a bullet in his hip.

Arguments for a new trial will be heard March 29. Conviction carries a sentence of from one to 10 years in the penitentiary.

MAN ACQUITTED OF MURDER

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

KENNETT, Mo., Feb. 13.—John Noell, former night marshal of Hornersville, Mo., was acquitted by a jury in Circuit Court last night of a charge of murder in the second degree. Noell was charged with having shot and killed Ira Smith, at Hornersville, Jan. 4, in a drug store. Noell contended that Smith had reached for a hammer and he thought Smith intended to kill him. The defendant produced a large number of witnesses who testified as to threats Smith had made against Noell's life and also the lives of other officers of Hornersville. The jury was out 30 minutes.

Police Sergeant Stephen T. Drbousek, 45 years old, died yesterday morning of gastritis in the Wyoming Street Police Station, to which he was attached. Drbousek was a widower and resided with a brother at 1762 Missouri avenue.

Slayers Denied New Trial.

Paul Chapman, 19 years old, and Charles Osborne, 20, both of East St. Louis, sentenced to 99 years for the murder of Deputy Sheriff William Barnes, were denied a new trial by Circuit Judge Frank Burton at Carlinville, Ill. The youths were convicted by a jury a week ago. They admitted driving up in a stolen automobile to Barnes' home and filling station at Nilwood, and exchanging shots with the officer, who sought to arrest them for a highway robbery committed a short time previously.

ARMY GENERAL STAFF CHANGES ANNOUNCED

Officers Involved Staunch Supporters of War Department Air Policies.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Major-General Fox Conner has been selected to become deputy chief of staff of the army, the second highest post in the military service. The change is one of several decided on in the general staff as a result of expiration of assignments.

Gen. Conner will succeed Major-General Denis E. Nolan, who will take command of the First Division, with headquarters at Fort Hamilton, N. Y., effective March 8. Brigadier-General Briant H. Wells, at Fort Benning, Ga., will become an assistant chief of staff to fill the place now occupied by Gen. Conner. Brigadier-General Hugh A. Drum, assistant chief of staff in charge of operations and training, will take command of the First Infantry brigade headquarters at Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., effective April 1.

Craig for Assistant Chief.

Major-General William D. Connor, now commanding American forces in China, has been assigned to command the Second Division at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., effective upon his return from the Orient. Major-General Malin Craig, present chief of cavalry, and who soon is to retire, will become assistant chief of staff.

Both the incoming and outgoing General Staff officers concerned in the transfers have been stanch supporters of the War Department's aviation policies, as opposed to the campaign conducted by Col. William Mitchell for a separate air corps.

U. R. RECEIVER WOULD PAY OFF CERTIFICATES

Asks for Court Authority to Make Arrangements With Reorganizers.

Receiver Rolla Wells of the United Railways applied to Federal Judge Faris yesterday for permission to enter into a contract with the Reorganization Committee of the company that will result in the payment of $4,200,000 in receiver's certificates and the exchange of $4,100,000 in underlying bonds for general 4 per cent bonds.

The Reorganization Committee offers $4,100,000 in underlying bonds and $1,900,000 in cash if the receiver will secure therefor $6,000,000 in general 4s from the St. Louis Union Trust Co., trustees under the mortgage. There is now outstanding $30,300,000 worth of general 4s.

The $1,900,000 paid in cash by the Reorganization Committee will be supplemented by $2,200,000 in cash in the receiver's possession for the retirement of the $4,200,000 worth of certificates.

The practical effect of this step, in addition to exchanging 6 per cent securities for those bearing only ' is to make the $9,790,000 of St. Louis Transit Co. bonds the prior lien and complete necessary foreclosure proceedings under them.

A hearing will be held by Judge Faris tomorrow on the disposition of pending matters in connection with the reorganization.

PAYROLLS MISSED BY ROBBERS, WHO ARE OUT-TALKED

Frustrated by Employes of Reo Auto Agency and American Radiator Co.—One Shot Fired.

$150 TAKEN FROM ONE CASH DRAWER

"We Haven't Got It Yet," Girl Cashier Tells Robbers While Men Are Being Paid.

Payrolls were on hand at the Reo automobile agency, 3145 Locust street, and the American Radiator Co., 4201 Duncan avenue, when armed and masked robbers called at noon yesterday, but the robbers were "talked out" of the money at the first place and missed all but $150 at the second.

Two men with revolvers and handkerchief masks who visited the Reo agency pressed revolvers against Fred Shaw, 3817 Washington boulevard, the sales manager, and Miss Elizabeth Cooney, 22 years old, of 4636 Tower Grove place, the telephone operator, and marched both into a private office, where one robber remained to guard them.

The other robber crossed over to the cashier's office, occupied by Miss Jessie Armbruster, 28, of 6000 Etzel avenue, the assistant cashier. The cashier had just gone upstairs to distribute the payroll, which was described as a "pretty good sum."

Girl Outwits Thieves.

"Where's the dough?" demanded the robber.

"I beg your pardon—I don't understand," answered Miss Armbruster.

"The dough—the money—where is it?" continued the robber, as he attempted to open a safe.

"You're too early," said Miss Armbruster, with a smile. "We haven't got it yet."

The robber believed her, and swore profusely in his disappointment. Then he called to his companion and both ran to the rear alley, where they got into a gray Packard automobile, occupied by two men, and drove off.

Shot Fired at Employe.

The payroll of the American Radiator Co. was being made up when three youths, with revolvers and handkerchief masks, walked up to the second floor offices and held up 15 men and women employes, including Francis A. Rickly, 5707 McPherson avenue, the assistant manager.

"Hands up, everybody," was the command, and a bullet was fired at the feet of one employe who hesitated. The bullet missed the feet.

"Where's the money?" the robbers asked, and the employes "passed the buck," saying they did not know. The safe was inspected, and found to be empty. Finally one youth discovered $156 in a cash drawer and took it. The robbers ran out and escaped in a Ford coupe. The payroll was insured.

REPORTED DIAMOND FIND CAUSES RUSH TO MISSISSIPPI

Osyka Transformed From Quiet Village of 800 Into Old-Fashioned Mining Camp.

By the Associated Press.

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 13.—Dr. E. N. Lowe, State geologist, said today that the chances were negligible that the hundreds of men who have rushed into Pike County, Mississippi, will find any diamonds there.

Reports that J. W. Deland of Chicago, a geologist, had found diamonds while prospecting for oil, have caused a rush to Pike County and the leasing for mineral rights of more than 2000 acres of ground, until Osyka, near where the find was reported, has been transformed from a quiet village of about 800 into an old-fashioned mining camp.

Dr. Lowe said that years ago crystals thought to be diamonds were discovered there and caused much excitement for a time, but that no diamond-bearing rock has ever been found in Mississippi.

Mud Shower at Lincoln, Ill.

By the Associated Press.

PEORIA, Ill., Feb. 13.—A mud shower fell at Lincoln, Ill., southeast of here, yesterday, red mud falling with the rain and spotting automobiles, windows and porches. The shower was similar to one about two years ago during a high windstorm. There was no high wind yesterday.

Buyers of "Quality at any Price"

Are buying Unit-Built Studebakers at sensible One-Profit prices . . . and getting quality!

REGARDLESS of price—there is but one Studebaker from the standpoint of excellence and worth.

Whether you buy this fine Studebaker Coach at $1195 or the Big Six Sedan at $2145—your dollar brings you the full benefit of One-Profit manufacture.

Both cars have the same alloy steels, northern white ash and hard maple, plate glass, genuine curled hair, etc. Both enjoy the same high standards of workmanship and fully machined crankshafts; carefully matched pistons; snug, flush-fitting doors; body joints dovetailed, mortised, tenoned, glued or screwed.

Studebaker standards are higher than those of cars selling for double Studebaker prices.

Studebaker's Unique Facilities

Few motor car "manufacturers" have foundries, forges, etc., to make their own engines—yet one-fifth of the cost of an automobile is in the engine. Even fewer build their own bodies—yet one-third of the cost of a car is in the body.

Not only does Studebaker make all bodies, and all engines used in Studebaker cars, but also all clutches, gear sets, springs, differentials, steering gears, brakes, axles, gray-iron castings, and drop forgings. Only Ford in the low-price field and Studebaker in the fine-car field enjoy the benefits of such complete manufacturing facilities.

One-Profit Value

These facilities enable Studebaker to manufacture quality cars on a One-Profit basis. They enable Studebaker to eliminate the profits of outside parts and body makers. Many major savings are thus effected and passed on to the ultimate buyers of Studebaker cars in the form of higher quality and lower price.

Unit-Built Construction

Studebaker facilities result, too, in Unit-Built construction—in cars designed, engineered and built as units. The hundreds of parts used in a Studebaker car function together as a unit, resulting in longer life, greater riding comfort and higher resale value. Scores of thousands of miles of excess transportation thus are built into Studebaker cars.

Always Kept Up-to-Date

Because all phases of manufacture are directly under Studebaker control, Studebaker cars are constantly kept up-to-date. We add improvements regardless of the calendar—we do not save them up for spectacular annual announcements which make cars artificially obsolete. Resale values are thus stabilized.

Rock Bottom Time-Payment Rates

Leading bankers, recognizing Studebaker stability, have made money available for financing Studebaker cars at low interest. They know Unit-Built cars bought at One-Profit prices and always kept up-to-date are exceptionally fine risks. Therefore, no car in the world is able to offer lower time-payment rates than Studebaker.

World's Most Powerful Car of its Size and Weight

At lowest price ever placed on an enclosed car by Studebaker—$1195

BASED upon the rating of the N. A. C. C. and the Society of Automotive Engineers, the Studebaker Standard Six is the world's most powerful car of its size and weight.

The most popular car in the Standard Six line is the Coach—$1195—the lowest priced enclosed car ever offered by Studebaker.

It has much more room than the average coach. In its wide, restful seats, five passengers ride in real comfort—with ample leg and head room and with room to enter or leave without disturbing occupant of folding seat.

There's a gasoline gauge on the dash, an 8-day clock, automatic windshield cleaner, rear-view mirror, ash receiver, cowl ventilator, stop light, air cleaner, gas and oil filters, dome light, coincidental lock, and full-size balloon tires. Spark control is automatic and there's a safety lighting control on the steering wheel.

Studebaker Standard Six Coach

freight and war tax extra

Under Studebaker's fair and liberal Budget Payment Plan, this Coach may be purchased out of monthly income for a small initial payment and at the lowest time-payment rates known to the automobile industry

URGES THAT WOMEN REBUILD POLITICS

Miss Gertrude Ely Calls Present System Unintelligent, in Address.

Miss Gertrude Ely of Philadelphia, director of the new voters' section of the National League of Women Voters, took the structure of American politics apart yesterday in an address before 500 young women at the Forest Park Hotel, pointed out the weaknesses of it and then urged them to rebuild it along broad lines where selfish maneuvering and jealousies would have no part.

Miss Ely delved deeply into the machinery of practical politics. High-sounding phrases of election time were contrasted with the considerations that the ward politician and his more advanced, yet wholly practical brother in the higher estates, use to determine platforms and appointments.

She left with her hearers the impression that they must begin with precinct and ward politics before they could take government from the hands of the more influential and professional politician.

Only 51 Per Cent Voted.

"The election of a president is a great crisis, although only 51 per cent of the people cared to vote upon it at the last election," she said. "Not a single act of his is without significance to the nation.

"My first national convention was the 1920 Chicago convention after I came back from France. I went there prepared to see the intelligence, education and splendid characters of a nation meet to nominate a President. I found them haggling over platform planks, taking a word out here to please the voters of one state, throwing a phrase in there to catch the votes of another. One man told me that the only thing that mattered was the success of his party.

"The inefficiency of the thing was laughable, but the machinery was without intelligence. Petty interests and personal considerations influenced to a great degree. Not a sentence, not a remark in the entire convention appealed to the intelligence.

Suggests Personal Inquiry.

"What colud be done if narrow party lines were forgotten? International affairs, for instance, should be above party lines."

She suggested intelligent inquiry into all phases of government and into the records of candidates in order that the people might know exactly for what and whom they were voting.

"Make the people get out and vote," she said. "It ought to be as commonplace as eating three meals each day."

DRAKE HOTEL MURDERERS CALMLY GO TO GALLOWS

Holmes and Woods Both Declare Innocence Before Being Hanged in Chicago.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—Joseph W. Holmes and Jack Woods, convicted of killing Frank B. Rodkey, a clerk in the Drake Hotel, during a hold-up last summer, were hanged in the Cook County jail today.

The others who participated in the robbery were killed later in pistol fights with the police. The fifth, the alleged "brains" of the quintet and for whom a $5000 reward is outstanding, William Mulneschuck, escaped with $10,000 taken in the robbery.

Woods and Holmes walked to the gallows smoking cigarettes, and made their final remarks in clear, firm voices.

"I plead not guilty," said Woods.

"Not guilty, and God bless you," said Holmes.

Tracy Drake, president and general manager of the Drake Hotel; John Drake Jr., assistant manager, and James R. McMurdie, house detective, who fought the robbers, witnessed the hanging.

The Rev. John Timothy Stone, pastor of the fashionable Fourth Presbyterian Church, gave spiritual consolation to Woods. Upon the fly leaf of Rev. Mr. Stone's bible Woods wrote:

"I have given my heart to my Savior, Jesus Christ. I trust Him as my Savior. If the boys would accept Him earlier, they would never get where I am, for He would save them from all sin."

The two youths shouted a lusty "good-by, boys," to the other prisoners, including four who will follow them to the gallows next Friday.

OSBORNE WOOD'S CHECKS PAID

Palm Beach Bank Will Not Prosecute.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., Feb. 13.—An announcement by the Palm Beach National Detective Agency, that a check to cover court costs and $3400 in worthless checks had been received, officers of the bank on which the checks were drawn said they did not care to push their charges against Osborne C. Wood, former army officer.

He went to Havana, Jan. 26 after issuing the checks and charges were filed against him in Criminal Court here. He is said now to be in a Havana hospital.

Granddaughter of E. H. Gary to Wed.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—The engagement of Miss Elizabeth Campbell of Evanston, granddaughter of Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, to Edward Sutherland Clark of Chicago, was announced today by the bride-elect's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Campbell. The wedding was set for April 24. Miss Campbell's paternal grandfather was the late Joseph C. Campbell of San Francisco. She is a graduate of Smith College. Clark attended the University of Chicago.

PRESIDING EPISCOPAL BISHOP MURRAY HERE

Religious Interest Greater Than Ever He Says — Thinks Controversy Helps.

The Right Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland and presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, is in St. Louis for a two day's stay. He arrived at Hotel Chase last evening, having motored from Springfield, Ill., with stops in East St. Louis and the East Side industrial district. Mrs. Murray is accompanying him on his tour, which has extended as far west as Denver, and which is made, as he explains, to establish personal contact.

"You can't do much at arm's length" is a motto which the presiding bishop, who was in business life until he was 36 years old, took from business into the ministry.

"There are 103 dioceses and districts of the Protestant Episcopal Church," he said, "and the Missouri diocese is the sixteenth I have visited since Jan. 1. I hope to visit all the 103 in my six-year term as presiding bishop.

"My personal observation," he continued, "is that there was never a time in the history of the church when there was so much interest in religious affairs as today. This is true especially among young people, notwithstanding what some say about the younger generation. I have never personally known so many young men to be taking an interest in religious matters, as shown by their desire to talk with clergymen on religion. I believe a great religious awakening is not far distant.

"Controversy will hasten this religious awakening," he said in reply to a question as to the discussions caused by modernism. "Discussion makes for greater life. The worst thing for religion is stagnation."

Bishop Murray said that Bishop Brent of Buffalo has accepted an appointment to take charge of the American Episcopal churches in European centers. Two of the best known of these are in Rome and Paris. Bishop Brent will give about four months of the next year to the work in Europe.

"We have just sent one of our best men to Mexico, Bishop Frank Creighton," he said. "Until hearing from him, I can say nothing definite as to our work in that country. But my understanding is that the Mexican laws against alien religious teachers will not apply to the pastors and bishops of churches which have a constituency of American or other English-speaking people."

Succeeded Bishop Tuttle.

Bishop Murray repeated his recent statement that the Church Temperance Society and its head, the Rev. Dr. Empringham, had no authority to speak for the Episcopal Church on the prohibition question. "Nor has any bishop such authority, the presiding bishop included," he added. "Their expressions merely represent individual opinions. The general convention of the church alone has the right to speak for the church."

Bishop Murray, who is 68 years old, was elected to the office of presiding bishop at the general convention in New Orleans last fall, succeeding to the office which was for many years held by the late Bishop Tuttle of St. Louis. He is white-haired, of medium stature, with an earnest, expressive face. The flat hat of an Anglican bishop is a feature of his garb.

He will preach at the 11 a. m. service in Christ Church Cathedral today, and will be the guest of honor at a dinner at Hotel Chase tomorrow night.

JERITZA WILDLY ACCLAIMED

17 Curtain Calls Demanded After Last Act of "Tosca."

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Maria Jeritza, Viennese soprano, gave her last subscription performance of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House this afternoon to a capacity audience, which lingered for 15 minutes after the final curtain to applaud the favorite. Her singing of the title role in Puccini's "Tosca", won her repeated encores after the second act, which contained her spectacular version of "Love and Music Have I Lived For," sung while reclining at full length on the stage. At the end of the performance the audience demanded 17 curtain calls and still clustered in front of the orchestra pit osme time after the lights had been lowered.

Jeritza's final appearance with the company this season will be Wednesday afternoon in the special non-subscription performance of Wagner's "Tanhauser," the first of the Wagner matinee recitals. Three hours after she makes her final bow, the curtain will be raised again, this time for the debut of the youngest prima donna, Marion Talley, of Kansas City.

FRANCO AWAITS FLYING ORDER

MADRID, Feb. 13.—The decision as to whether Commander Franco shall continue his flight to Chile and north to the United States, or return to Spain directly, awaits action by Gen. Primo de Rivera, the Premier, who is expected to reach Madrid shortly from Malaga.

Public subscriptions have been opened for a fund for the aviators, and several large contributions have already been made. Franco's mother has sent him a plea to comply with his promise and land at Ferrol, his birthplace, where his townsmen are waiting to embrace him.

CRIMINAL LIBEL WARRANTS FOR 12 UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Charges Follow Confession Involving Youths at Baker in Scandal Paper's Publication.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LAWRENCE, Kan., Feb. 13.—Circumstances of the publication and circulation of "The Rod," a scandal paper at Baker University, in Baldwin, Kan., were explained today by the confession of Joe Myler of Iola, a student.

Eleven other students were implicated and Sheriff W. J. Cummings has gone to Baldwin to arrest them.

Myler and Tom Slavens, a printer at Baldwin, with the 11 others are charged with criminal libel. Bonds were fixed at $750. Those accused besides Myler and Slavens are: Russell Baldwin, "Tud" Dalton, "Bud" Elliott, Donald Gulley, George Fogg, Leo Neyhard, Madison Idol, Ray Atkinson, Buell Hawks and Harry L. German.

The Baker chapter of Theta Nu Epsilon, secret interfraternity organization, was the sponsor for the scandal publication, according to Myler. Myler was secretary of this organization, and after members of the order gathered the information, Myler rewrote and edited it for publication. Arrangements were completed with Leo Hettick, a Gridley (Kan.) printer, to print the publication. The publication was distributed on the porches of fraternities and sororities.

Conviction for criminal libel in Kansas carries a penalty of one year in prison or a fine not to exceed $1000 or both.

TWO REINDICTED FOR MURDER IN OSAGE INDIAN INQUIRY

Latest True Bill Against Hale and Ramsey More Specific to Location of Alleged Crime.

By the Associated Press.

GUTHRIE, Ok., Feb. 13.—A new indictment was returned here late today by a Federal grand jury against W. K. Hale and John Ramsay, charging the murder of Henry Roan, an Osage Indian. The indictment was identical with one returned Jan. 9, with the exception that it was more specific as to the location of the alleged crime. After returning the single indictment the jury recessed until Feb. 26.

The previous indictment was quashed because it did not describe in sufficient detail the location where Roan's body was found on the allotment of Rose Little Star. The new indictment was amended to make this more definite. Hale and Ramsey will be arraigned in Federal Court at Oklahoma City Monday morning.

MUSICIAN SUES UNION

Director Seeks to Prevent Cancellation of Theater Contract.

Achie J. Bott, orchestra leader at the O'Fallon Theater, 4024 Florissant avenue, yesterday filed suit in Circuit Court to enjoin his expulsion from the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association, Local No. 2, American Federation of Musicians. He also seeks to prevent interference with a contract he is under to furnish an orchestra for that theater.

Bott alleges he has not been given an opportunity to defend the charges on which his expulsion is based. He is under contract, he states, to furnish a five-piece orchestra for the O'Fallon Theater until the middle of August and also asks an injunction restraining the owners from abrogating the contract. Guy M. Daily, president of the local and other officers are named as defendants. Daily declined to discuss the suit. The theater owners, Clarence H. and Chester Kaiman, are named as co-defendants.

GUY MASSEY, WANDERING SAILOR-COMPOSER, DIES

Origin of "The Prisoner's Song," Credited to His Authorship, Being Questioned.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—News of the death of Guy Massey, wandering singer, sailor and composer at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., received today by his cousin, Vernon Dalhart, a New York singer, has revealed that the origin of "The Prisoner's Song," one of his compositions, now popular in night clubs and with radio singers, is being questioned. The ballad already has sold 800,000 copies, though Massey is said to have received only $3.50 royalties from the sale of his sheet music.

Massey, during his last illness, said the song was written "from my own heart," and the tune picked up when he sang for prisoners in jail. Authorities on folk songs of the South and West contend the ballad was known there as a cowboy favorite years ago. Representatives of the music house which published the song said Massey had assigned his royalties to a third person.

Dalhart said Massey composed the song while living with him here. Among Massey's effects were found three pictures of a Miss Alice Clausen, on the back of one was written, "died Sept. 29, 1923." A Miss Alice Clausen of New York committed suicide on that date by jumping from the twenty-first story of an office building. No motive ever has been found for her act. Her father said tonight he did not know Massey. Dalhart said that Massey knew Miss Clausen.

Sterling Price King, an attorney, with offices in the Planters Building, has announced he is organizing an Anti-Evolution Society, to be incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. The society will endeavor to organize a chain of clubs throughout the United States, whose purpose will be the dissemination of educative antievolutionary propaganda among laymen and churchmen.

King is the author of one book and several articles on scientific subjects. He states that the society will combat evolution from a scientific and not from a theological standpoint.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

The Post-Dispatch reserves the right to reject any query. Personal and telephone calls, or answers by mail, cannot be given attention, except letters on medical questions of undoubted sincerity when accompanied by stamped addressed envelope.

GEO. P.—The large copper cent dated 1837 is worth from 1c to 20c.

G. C.—Inquire of the superintendent of any one of the railroads here regarding the position in question.

ANXIOUS M.—You can get many books on "plumbing" at the Public Library. Inquire there for the information.

READER.—We would advise you to take the fox fur to the person who cured it. There should be no odor after the fur has been properly cured.

CINDY. — The following is the proper form used in addressing an envelope to the Governor of Missouri: His Excellency the Governor, Jefferson City, Mo. The formal salutation would be Your Excellency, and the informal beginning, Dear Governor Baker.

READER.—To remove the iron rust on marble make a paste of wood ashes and kerosene and rub it well into the rust. Leave it on for a few hours before scouring it with dry ashes (sifted fine) and a flannel cloth. This will remove rust from almost any surface. If you cannot get wood ashes use whiting.

A. B. C.—A cement which will resist the action of hot or cold water and which is useful for mending earthenware and stone jars, stopping cracks and holes in iron and tin kettles and pans, is made by mixing litharge and glycerin to the consistency of thick cream or putty. The article mended must not be used until the cement has had time to dry. Leave in the sunny window of a dry room for at least a week before you put anything into it.

NEWLYWED.—The following is the recipe for scalloped oysters: One pint of oysters, 4 tablespoons oyster liquor, 2 tablespoons milk or cream, ½ cup of stale bread crumbs, 1 cup of cracker crumbs, ½ cup of melted butter, salt and pepper to taste. Mix bread and cracker crumbs and stir in butter. Put a thin layer in bottom of a buttered shallow baking dish, cover with oysters and sprinkle with salt and pepper; add ½ each oyster liquor and cream. Repeat and cover top with remaining crumbs. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven. Never allow more than two layers of oysters for scalloped oysters; if three layers are used the middle layer will be underdone, while others are properly cooked. A sprinkling of mace or grated nutmeg to each layer is considered by many an improvement. Sherry wine may be used in place of cream.

LEGAL INFORMATION

(By a Member of the St. Louis Bar Association.)

DIXON, MO. — They could attach other property outside of Texas, owned by you for the balance on the notes.

MRS. T.—The father would have no right to sign the child's name. If he did so with any fraudulent purpose he could be prosecuted.

TROUBLED.—They can sue, get judgment and garnish the per cent of his wages. All you can do is talk to them in the circumstances and ask them to give you more time.

C. F.—Suit on a note is barred six years after the note became due, if there have been no payments on it. Suit on an open account is barred after five years.

OTTO E.—You cannot garnish his pension from the Government, but you can garnish the money he has in the bank. Consult a lawyer.

WAITING.—A farmer does not own fur-bearing animals even though they be on his land. (2) He must have a license to ship the furs. (2) The State owns the ducks, assuming that they are wild ducks.

MRS. E. G. T.—The returns now being sent out are for your 1925 income. It does not matter whether you have any income now or not—if you had an income in 1925 in excess of the exemption you will have to make a return and pay the tax.

A BROKEN - HEARTED DIVORCEE.—If he is able to support the son the court would probably require him to do so. You should consult a lawyer with regard to this. If you agreed to keep the money you borrowed, he could sue you for it.

M. L.—You can have him prosecuted without having John A. Doe come to St. Louis, but in order for him to be convicted either John A. Doe or some official of the bank on which the check was drawn would have to testify at the trial. If the check were signed with a purely fictitious name the situation might be different.

MEDICAL QUESTIONS

Health and sanitation questions of public interest only will be considered. Diagnosis or treatment of individual cases will not be given.

J. L. H.—Try the following for your condition: 5-grain cystogen tablet in ½ glass of water three times daily between meals. Abstain from alcoholics, tea and coffee. Regular hours for sleep and meals. If you can afford it, supplement this with a good mineral water, three or four glasses a day.

B. C.—You can obtain the treatment for the superfluous hair at the Skin and Cancer Hospital, Theresa and Washington avenues, free of charge. Also possibly at the Barnes Hospital should you prefer it. Just how long a time it would take depends upon the extent of surface there is to treat as more than one treatment is generally necessary to cover the entire area. The method of treatment is with an electric needle, although others are sometimes employed.

K. M. — Our understanding is that naprapathy refers to a form of presumably curative treatment of disease similar to the chiropractic method. It is in fact but an offshoot of that cult. There was a school of this sort in St. Louis at one time but was abandoned some two or three years ago. The one in Chicago is still in active operation.

IZZY.—The pain you describe is doubtless due to a spasmodic contraction of the stomach and bowels caused by indigestion, as is shown by the acidity for which you have to take baking soda to relieve. The taking of baking soda is not injurious except when taken in large quantities and over a long period of time. However, it is in no sense curative, but only relieves by neutralizing the acidity at the time. Our best advice would be to consult a physician for diagnosis and treatment.

LOAN REPORT IS WITHOUT INFLUENCE

Stock Market Holds Remarkably Firm During Week—Developments in Food Merger Proposal Being Watched.

By Leased Wire from the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted financial review, says:

"Apparently the financial community is not greatly concerned at this time over what the new loan figures reveal, but it is mightily stirred by signs of any change in public sentiment towards mergers. Last Saturday's announcement that loans to brokerage firms affiliated with the New York Stock Exchange on Jan. 20 totaled $3,515,174,154, was accepted as a condition already discounted. Since the market had no basis for comparison it could not judge how far speculation had been allowed to run during the last year or how much it had been reduced since the great bull sessions of late 1925. In consequence publication of this huge figure had little or no effect on stock prices and the market as a whole held remarkably firm. Such weakness as did appear was induced by political opposition that developed to certain food mergers and the fear of financial community that an unfavorable turn to the whole consolidation movement may be brought on. To date the financiers had proceeded with their plans unhampered and at times even had become bold, but they learned this week that the antitrust laws are not dead statutes. They furthermore learned that financial marriages will be welcomes so long as the unions are made for the benefit of all, but only then.

Loan Totals Reported.

"In some ways the loan figures that were published by the Federal Reserve Board at Washington yesterday are more interesting than those which came out a week ago. That the totals did not correspond was to have been expected since they reflect different kinds of compilations. Essentially, the Stock Exchange figures represent funds borrowed by brokers and the Federal Reserve totals those lent by banks, but the two do not cover precisely the same transactions. Banks in New York City that are members of the Federal Reserve System on Feb. 3 had $2,019,597,000 outstanding in the form of loans to brokers and dealers, with stocks and bonds as collateral. The Government compilation is made doubly useful by what it shows of the January trend. Loans on Jan. 6 totaled $2,141,125,000 but during each successive week they fell materially until by Jan. 27 they had dropped to $2,088,192,000, a decline of $50,000,000 for the month. The decline was so much accelerated during the last few days of January and the opening days of February, apparently, that this net shrinkage in loans since early January reached $81,000,000. The figures reflect the calling of loans previously noted. If the loan calls are reduced from now on, as is possible, the situation may be viewed as bullish by the stock market. Much depends upon what the politicians say about the large out-of-town loans on this market and whether or not they see political advantages in raising the cry that too much of the farmers' money is going into Wall street.

Strike Settlement Effect.

"Settlement of the anthracite coal strike should tend to heal one of the sorest spots in industry and will be viewed as a constructive step. The generally amicable relationships between employers and employes, and the conservative viewed as bullish by the stock it gets a hand on the wheels of management, are certain to prolong our prosperity. Such developments again focus attention on the probable future trend of business and direct us to make an analysis afresh of the favorable and unfavorable factors. Favorable factors are the sustained record activity in the motor and building industries, the absence of inflationary tendencies in business, the good wages for labor and full employment, satisfaction over the political situation and the economies that are bound to result from mergers now in the making. Unfavorable factors are the signs of reduced levels for commodity prices, hesitation in the steel industry and the fact that many companies are operating on narrow margins of profit, making it problematical what will happen when the present large volume of business falls off.

Auto Industry Situation.

"Special interest attaches to the position of the automobile industry for the January and February production to date has run substantially ahead of 1925, and reports from the various motor shows give unmistakable evidence of a demand for cars that exceeds the most sanguine expectations of last autumn. It is now virtually a foregone conclusion that the output in the first quarter of 1926 will top that for the same period last year, and most prophets feel confident that the second quarter would likewise will be better than that of 1925. What nobody knows is how the demand for cars will run during the last half of the current year, for of course, most persons feel somewhat cautious about predicting the trend of general business for late 1926.

Saturday's Close Irregular.

"Constructive developments transpiring in the holiday recess of financial markets found a ready response when trading was resumed on the stock market today. Professionals who had sold for a decline hurried to cover their short commitments, while others expressed satisfaction with the outlook for better business by bidding up shares of companies likely to benefit. The general list moved forward briskly in active trading several high-priced favorites scoring advances little short of sensational.

Reversal Near Close.

Stock prices later displayed a complete reversal of form, turning heavy under the weight of a large volume of profit-taking and bear selling. The sensational collapse of Devoe and Raynolds, which broke 22½ points to 60½ on bear selling, was the outstanding individual feature. Savage Arms broke 11½ points to 57. The late selling was accelerated by announcement that the Federal Government had brought proceedings under the Clayton Act against the National Food Products Corporation, National Dairy Products, a block of whose stock was acquired by National Food Products, broke over 7 points to 62 and then rallied to 65½. Other outstanding weak spots included American Brake Shoe and Foundry, American Locomotive, American Woolen, Baldwin, California Packing, Kelsey Wheel, Mack Truck, New York Canners and Standard Milling, all off 3 to nearly 5½ points.

Sharp Rise in Heavy Trading.

"Responding to several favorable developments over the holiday recess, prices of speculative securities soared in unusually heavy trading at the start of the session. Settlement of the coal strike and passage by the Senate of the administration bill to reduce taxes were the items of chief interest. Other factors were the advance in General Motors dividend rate to $5 a year and the publication of the Federal Reserve figures on brokerage loans here showing a gradual decrease in January. High-priced industrials scored sharp advances. General Electric and American Can forging ahead into record high territory. Allied Chemical, Commercial Solvents, issues, Cast Iron Pipe and other specialties were strong, while motor shares were in demand in sympathy with a rise in General Motors of about 4 points. Dupont scored a gain in anticipation of a higher dividend to correspond with the increased payment by General Motors. Shares of coal producing and distributing concerns were in demand. Anthracite carrying rails were strong. Delaware & Hudson, Lackawanna and Reading being in demand. Burlington Bros., Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron and other shares affected by the improved outlook for the industry were buoyant.

Scandinavian Exchanges Strong.

Sensational advances in exchange rates on Oslo and Copenhagen featured quiet trading in foreign exchanges. Movements to stabilize Norwegian and Danish exchange were reflected yesterday in London in a rise of a cent in Danish crowns and a sharp advance in Norwegian rates. Although there was a slight recession in London today, rates in the local market were sharply higher than Thursday's closing. Elsewhere changes were small, sterling and French francs holding steady.

New York Bank Statement.

"Increased demand for funds for holiday requirements was reflected in the weekly statement of the Clearing House banks, explaining the higher rates for call loans toward the close of the week. The excess reserve fell to $11,880,810 as a result of a decrease in surplus of $27,196,680 as compared with last week. Loans, discounts, etc., decreased $36,527,060.

MIXED CHANGES IN MORE ACTIVE LOCAL STOCKS

Ely-Walker Leads in Volume of Business on St. Louis Exchange During Week, Showing Small Net Alteration.

ST. LOUIS STOCK EXCHANGE, Feb. 13.—Ely-Walker common with turnover of more than 2400 shares was the most active security on the local market the past week. Rice-Stix was next with about half as heavy sales. Only additional net changes were shown. In the general market gains exceeded losses for the week with about nine securities ending on the basis as the previous week.

Hamilton-Brown was one of the individual features of the week, selling down substantially, but latter rallying and showing net loss of 2 points at close.

Skouras was a little irregular. Independent Packing gained fractionally. International Shoe common lost 2 points and Huttig a fraction.

The total volume of business was smaller than previous week, but the week was one day short, owing to holiday Friday.

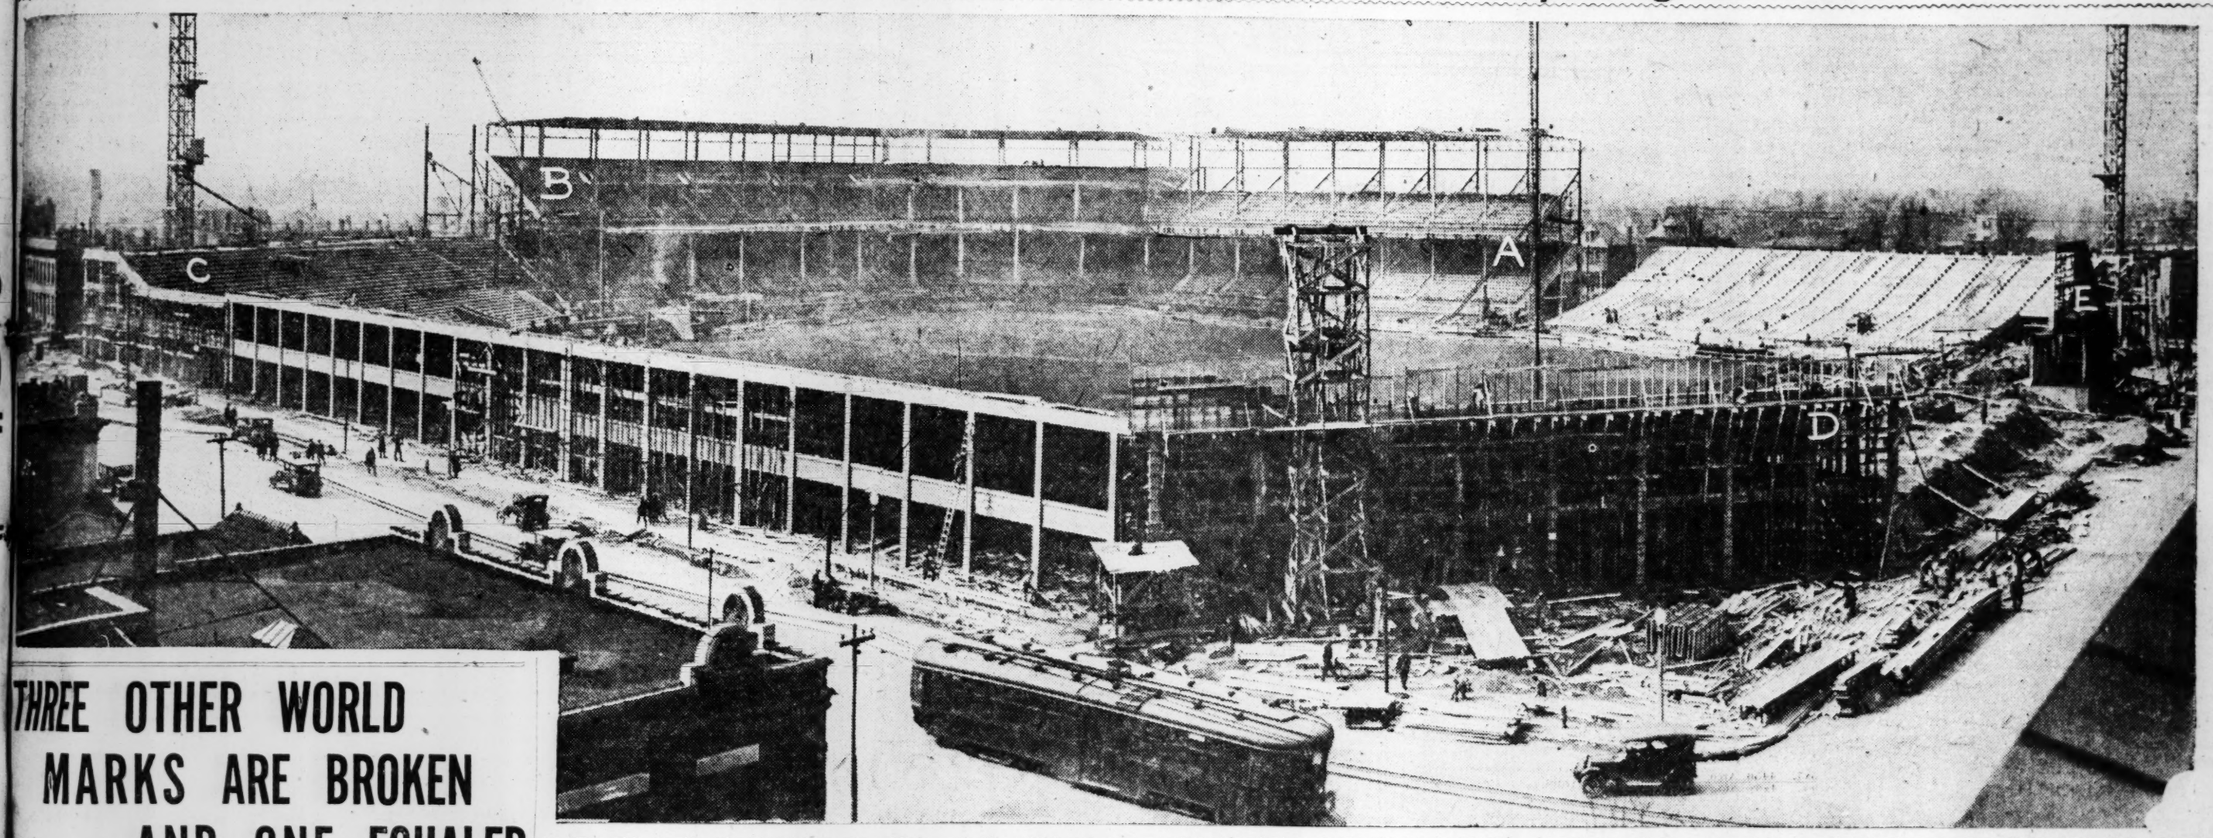
Hoff Establishes New Indoor Record of 13 Feet 3 Inches for Pole Vault

Sportsman's Park, as It Appears Two Months Before Opening of Season



The old grandstand, enlarged by the addition of nine additional rows on the upper deck, extends from A to B. This grandstand will be extended from A to E and from B to C, taking in the territory formerly occupied by the pavilions. New pavilions will extend along Grand avenue and around the corner, taking in part of the territory fronting on Sullivan avenue, from C to D. The only bleachers will be on Sullivan avenue from D to E.
The contract calls for completion of the park early in April and the men in charge of the reconstruction say they are ahead of their schedule, thanks to the mild winter.

THREE OTHER WORLD MARKS ARE BROKEN AND ONE EQUALED

...ant, Helffrich and Taylor Shatter Records in Wilco Games — High Hurdle Figure Is Tied Twice.

...the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Charlie Hoff of Oslo, Norway, boosted world's indoor pole vault record to 13 feet 3 inches at the Wilco A games in the 13th Regiment armory tonight, clearing the bar ... many inches to spare long after a field of six competitors had ...pped out.

Three other world's records ...e shattered, while one, the 80-...d high hurdle, was twice ...ualed. Plant, Helffrich and F. ...rgan Taylor were the other ...ndard breakers besides Hoff, ...e Taylor and Christiernsen ...d the figure over the high sticks. ...Hoff failed in his first attempt ...clear the pole and fell flat on ...s face, the wind being knocked ...t of him. It was several seconds ...fore he recovered and the crowd ...ped as he was lifted to his feet ...officials.

...A little jig, a few steps and he ...oke into a sprint while the crowd ...eered his gameness in attempting ...other lift to the dizzy height. In ...successful vault it appeared that ...arch in his body was fully a ...t above the bar.

The world's indoor record was ...ualed twice in the 80-yard high ...rdles, when Carl Christiernson, ...the Newark A. C., holder of ...e world's mark, topped the high ...bers in 10 2-5 seconds to win ...e first heat. F. Morgan Taylor, ...the Illinois A. C., took the second ...t in slower time and then Tay-...equaled Christiernson's mark ...winning the final. The original ...ord was established Jan. 24, ...924.

Plant Sets New Record.

Another indoor world's record ...s when Alan Helffrich, former Penn State star, carried the colors of the New York A. C. to a victory in the 500-meter run in 1:05 flat, 4-5 of a second better than his own record for the distance, estab...lished Jan. 6, 1925.

F. Morgan Taylor, of the Illinois A. C., contributed another world's indoor record when he broke the existing mark in the 80-yard low hurdles with the time of 9 3-10 seconds, clipping 3-10 of a second off the mark established by Forest Smithson, of San Francisco, Feb. 19, 1909.

Hussey Wins Sprint.

Francis Hussey, of Boston College, won the 100-yard dash, the final of the sprint series in 10 seconds flat. H. H. Cummings Jr., University of Virginia, trailed Hussey to the tape by four feet, with the present record holder, Louis A. Clarke, running for the Newark A. C., third.

The first heat of the 130-yard dash was won by H. H. Cummings Jr., of the University of Virginia with Cyril Coaffee of the Illinois A. C. second. The second heat went to Louis Clarke, former Johns Hopkins sprinter, but now running for the Newark A. C., with Alfred Leconey of the Meadow Brook A. C. of Philadelphia second. DeHart Hubbard of Cincinnati breasted the tape first in the second heat, but was disqualified.

Dodge Wins 1000 Meter.

Ray Dodge, running under the colors of the Illinois A. C., won the 1000-meter run. Edward Kirby, Newark A. C., was second and J. J. Connolly of the New York A. C. third.

A picked field of nine starters faced the gun in this event. Abel Kiviat, veteran Wilco A. A. runner, fell on the first turn, while leading and the field hurdled him. The time was 2:31 6-10, a trifle slower than the record for the event held by Joie Ray, Illinois A. C., established last year. This is the only record Ray holds outright.

The University of Maryland's crack quartet won the one-mile intercollegiate relay after a bit-

Oklahoma Quint Defeats Tigers

Valley Conference Leaders Score 36—27 Victory With McBride in Hospital.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Feb. 13.—Oklahoma, leading five of the Missouri Valley conference, playing without its scoring ace, McBride, defeated the University of Missouri basketball team here tonight 36 to 27. McBride is in the University Hospital here suffering from hemorrhages as a result of injuries suffered when the Sooners met Washington University at St. Louis last night.

Missouri started with a rush which gave the Tigers a lead of four points within 60 seconds, but Oklahoma stopped the spurt by calling time out, regained the lead and stayed in front for the remainder of the game, save for a momentary Tiger advantage in the second half. At the end of the first period Oklahoma was in front, 16 to 14.

$50,000 Added in 6 Big Stake Events for Spring Meet at Fairmount Track

Fairmount Derby, With $25,000 Heads List — Opening Date Announcement Withheld, but May 29 Appears Certain.

The program of stake events, for the Spring Meeting of the Fairmount Jockey Club, made public yesterday disclosed that the management has pledged itself to give $50,000 in added money to the six big fixtures.

In addition to the $25,000 added to the Fairmount Derby purse, there will be $5000 added to each of the following five stakes: The Illinois Stakes, the Valley Stakes, the Collinsville Handicap, the Statler Hotel Handicap and the Jefferson Hotel Handicap.

While no official statement has been made regarding the date of the opening of the 32-day meeting, it is virtually certain that the meeting will open on Saturday, May 29, and close on Monday, July 5. Entries for the six big stake events will close March 15.

One of the reasons for the delay in fixing the date of the opening and closing and the dates of the stake events is the policy of the Fairmount Jockey Club to work in close association with the Kentucky Jockey Club and the Matt J. Winn interests, to avoid conflicts. Contracts which were let for the building of the new clubhouse specified that the work must be completed by May 1.

Only a few of the leading tracks of the country have so many $5000 stakes as Fairmount will crowd into its 32 racing days. If racing opens on May 29 and closes on July 5, as is anticipated, there will be two big holidays and six Saturdays included. The holidays are Decoration Day and the Fourth of July, both of which fall on Sunday, but will be celebrated on the following Monday.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 13.—The University of Minnesota swimming team splashed their way to an easy victory over Chicago here tonight, 51 to 18.

The speedy Gopher relay team clipped two seconds from the Western Conference record of 1:18 2-5 and came within 2-5 of a second of the national collegiate record.

SHAWKEY SIGNS AND WILL SERVE AS COACH

By the Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Feb. 13.—Bob Shawkey, veteran right hander of the New York Yankees, signed his 1926 contract here today after a talk with Manager Miller Huggins. It was announced that this spring Shawkey will act in the dual role of pitcher and coach of young twirlers at the Yankee training camp here.

As coach, Shawkey will replace George Wiltse, former Giant left-hander and later manager of the Buffalo club, who, Huggins announced, has been released. Wiltse acted as a scout in the latter part of last season.

Huggins is banking heavily on Johnson, McQuaide and Braxton and Myles Thomas, recruits.

Aaron Ward, second baseman for the last five years, will be used only as a third base understudy, said the Yankee manager.

Hoerr to Play Stocking Today In Squash Final

St. Louis Champion Defeats O. S. Greene in Western Amateur Semifinal.

Roland M. Hoerr of the University Club of St. Louis and George Stocking of the Omaha University Club will meet this morning in the final match of the third annual Western amateur squash tennis championship tournament. The match will be played at the University Club.

Hoerr, who is city champion, qualified for the title final by defeating Orland S. Greene of Cincinnati yesterday afternoon, 15-3, 15-11, 15-8. Stocking won his way to the final by defeating Jack Gordon of St. Louis, 15-10, 15-7, 15-8. Stocking's greater accuracy and experience were the deciding factors in his straight set victory over Gordon, who furnished one of the upsets of the tournament Friday by defeating the defending champion, C. L. Harrison of Cincinnati.

Hoerr, who was finalist in the Western tournament at Cincinnati last year, conquered Greene without much difficulty, his smashes being too much for Greene. He was pressed at the start of the second set, but soon assumed the lead and was master all the way.

VISITORS SCORE 5 GOALS IN LAST 4 MINUTES; EARLY LEAD WINS FOR THE BEARS

Pikeway Quintet Not as Strong as in Contest Friday Night—Passing Is Poor and Team Lacks Snap—Hutton Stars.

Washington University's basketball team scored its fifth Missouri Valley Conference championship victory of the season last night, defeating the Oklahoma Aggies, 27 to 25, at the Pikeway Field House. At the end of the half, the Bears had a 15-9 advantage. It was the second victory in two days for the men of Coach White, Oklahoma, the Valley leader having been beaten on Friday.

A spurt during the last four minutes of play, when the Bears did a bit of inadvisable stalling for time, almost won for the Aggies. Four minutes before the finish, the Bears were leading 27—15. However, at this point, the Aggies started a rush that netted five field goals and placed them only two points behind when the game ended. Hall tossed in the final basket just as the contest came to a close.

This rally indicated that the Maulbetsch coached aggregation is one that likes to come from behind. It happened the night before at Columbia against the Tigers, when the Aggies coming from far in the rear, drew up to within one point of Missouri.

Bears Not So Good.

Coach White's aggregation did not play as well last night as in the game with the Sooners. In fact, it looked as though the Oklahoma victory had taken everything out of the quintet. The work was not as snappy, the players did not follow up shots; they were not breaking as quickly, while the passing was sluggish.

However, there was one redeeming feature from the Bear standpoint. And that was the work of Hutton, who was substituted at left forward for Eckert. Hutton played his best game of the season and his play indicated that he would be a valuable substitute for the remainder of the championship race. He scored three field baskets.

Bears Take Lead.

Although the Bears did not get a shot at the basket during the first eight minutes of the contest, so close was the Aggie guarding, the locals got off in front as a result of three free throws. At the five-minute mark, the Aggies were leading, 9—8, but that was the last time they were out in front. It was some brilliant work by Cox, who was playing his Valley game of the year, that enabled Wash-

"BROWNS AND ATHLETICS MOST IMPROVED AMERICAN LEAGUE TEAMS"

Sisler's Team Improved More Than All Rivals, Baseball Official Says

Joe Page Points Out That Sisler, in Getting Rid of Shocker Two Seasons Ago, Has Since Acquired Four Pitchers—Gaston, Giard, Zachary and Ballou.

By George W. Daley,
Of the New York World Sport Staff.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—The Philadelphia Athletics and the St. Louis Browns are the teams which have improved the most during the off-season, according to Joe Page of Montreal, who runs the Canadian Baseball League in the summer and all the hockey leagues of the known world in the winter. He knows a base hit from a poke check.

Mr. Page is a picker of no mean repute. He picked the Cincinnati Reds to beat the Chicago White Sox in 1919, even before he heard the series was framed. He hasn't been wrong about a world series since the Boston Red Sox beat the Giants in eight games in 1912. When Joe sums up a baseball situation it usually stays summed.

Therefore, when he says that the Athletics and the Browns have been the most improved teams in the American League since the last inning was played last October, and that one of the two ought to win the American League championship, it means something.

It means a whole lot, for Joe is a strong partisan of the Chicago White Sox, for which team he did a lot of scouting in years past, and he might be excused if he gave the Sox an edge.

"The Athletics and the Browns are the coming teams," said Joe the other day when he was in New York to settle some fine points in a hockey dispute.

Sisler Has Improved His Team.

"Sisler has improved his team more than any other in the American League. I don't think he has improved it quite enough to be up with the Athletics, who have gone ahead, too, but the Athletics and the Browns will show the way to the Senators and the Yankees and Detroit all through next year.

"The Athletics are bound to be strong, because it has been necessary to make few changes. Joe Hauser, who was out of the lineup all last year, will be ready and that will add strength, and French will add strength to the outfield and Bill Wambsganss to the infield, right where it faltered last year. The pitching staff doesn't need much help. Gray won't be out of the game six weeks again, as he was last year, and that will help, too.

"But the Browns have done some clever swapping during the off-season. Anyone who thinks that Sisler is just a first baseman is fooling himself. No move he makes is made without a reason back of it. He pulled a great deal a year ago when he took Bush, Gaston and Giard from the Yankees for Shocker. Now he has let Bush go for Zachary and Ballou. He has, therefore, converted Shocker into four pitchers, for he has Gaston and Giard left and both are winners.

"Ballou ought to be a winner, and, to my mind, Zachary will win as many games as Bush. Sisler also has grabbed Wally Schang, just the man he needed to steady his young pitchers. He makes it a rule, apparently, when he puts over a trade, to give away no one he can't get along without.

"So, I am convinced, the teams you must watch in the American League are the Athletics and the St. Louis Browns. The Detroits and the Senators had better wake up. The parade is past them. They are going to seed.

The Yankees have the right idea and are developing new men. That is what they must have, but whether it will show this year is a question."

Barney Shotton Appointed Leader Of Syracuse Club

Former Assistant Under Rickey Made Manager of International League Team.

Burton Edwin "Barney" Shotton, former Brownie and Cardinal outfielder and coach and assistant manager of the Cardinals under Branch Rickey for several years, has been appointed manager of the Syracuse club of the International League, Secretary Clarence Lloyd of the St. Louis National League club announced last night. President Sam Breadon of the Cardinals is part owner of the Syracuse club.

Shotton was born in Brownhelm, O., in 1884, and played his first professional ball at Erie in 1908. In 1909 he was sold to the Browns and in 1910 he was released to Omaha. From there he went to Wheeling and in 1911 to Cleveland. He was sent to Columbus the same season and in the winter of 1911 was obtained by the Browns. With the exception of 1918, when he was with Washington, Shotton has been with a St. Louis clubs ever since 1911. In 1917 he was traded by the Browns to Washington along with Lavan for Pitcher Gallia and cash. The Cardinals purchased him from Washington in 1919.

Shotton was first lieutenant under Rickey until Rickey was deposed about June 1, 1925. He was Sunday manager under Rickey, who, as is known, did not appear at the park on Sundays. Shotton was well liked by the players and he was mentioned as a candidate for the managerial job when it was known that Rickey was about to leave the field of action for the position as business manager of the Cardinal organization.

SAM JENNY FIRST IN TRAP SHOOT FEATURE

By the Associated Press.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Feb. 13.—Sam Jenny of Highland, Ill., won the international all-around championship at the Interstate trapshooting tournament here, breaking 189 of a possible 200 targets, yesterday.

Mark Arie, Champaign, Ill., Frank Hughes, Chicago, and J. B. Troeh, Portland, Ore., tied for second with 186 each and Frank Troeh, Portland, Ore., and E. P. Woodward, Houston, Tex., were next with 184.

Seven gunners tied with perfect scores of 25 in the national flyer handicap, but Jean Pope, Moline, Ill., won in the shoot-off, killing his eleventh after the others had missed.

Mark Arie leads the field in the number of targets broken in the tournament thus far, the Champaign gunner having accounted for 838 out of a possible 900.

The international flyer championship at 100 flyers will be the final event of the tournament today.

ington to break through for its initial field baskets.

The Bears played well during the first half, but after Winkler had been put out of the game as a result of four personal fouls, shortly after the start of the closing period, both the defense and offense of the quintet coached by Don White suffered.

Most of the Aggies' scoring came as a result of Washington errors. Bad passes were intercepted to advantage throughout the clash.

Each quintet scored 11 field goals, but the Bears made good on two more free throws and that represented the margin of victory.

The Bears' next championship game will be played with the Kansas Aggies at Manhattan, Kan., Friday night.

Louisiana Derby's Leading Candidate; Race That Made Him Favorite

NURMI (THE FINN-HURAKAN).

Now early favorite for the first derby of the year, Nurmi, in the $30,000 New Orleans Handicap, the running of which is shown below, won from a field of 21, after getting off none too well.

WRAY'S COLUMN

Nurmi Another Black Gold.

DERBY conversation will soon be in the air again. Already the Louisiana Derby candidates have been announced and in a few days the Kentucky Derby book will be available.

This year there is no Black Gold to lure winter racing followers to risk the family plate on a long shot. There will, however, be considerable animation shown if Nurmi, son of The Finn, displays ability to pick up 126 pounds.

At this writing it appears that Nurmi may possibly develop into the usual winter derby "hot thing." Already he has shown well in a field of 21, when he captured the $30,000 New Orleans handicap. One more good race will be needed to prove this contender, however, and to make him favorite for the Louisiana Derby, which will be run about one month from today.

If he wins the Louisiana Derby, Nurmi will be played long and heavily in the Kentucky Derby, notwithstanding the fate of last year's winter choice, Quatrain, is still in the minds of turf followers.

Nurmi is bred to go a distance, has won under all kinds of track conditions and it remains only to be found whether he can carry the weight.

A Great Horse Ruined.

WINTER racing is a terrific strain on derby candidates. Black Gold's experience is still remembered. This great colt was raced 19 times as a two-year-old, and began a three-year-old career almost with the dawn of the new year. He raced at the winter tracks and he raced at Louisville before the derby. Then, after winning the Kentucky Derby, they still continued to race him and when the season's sun set on Black Gold he had won four derbies, but lost forever his racing legs.

Black Gold broke down in training as a four-year-old and has never raced since his three-year-old form.

Black Gold deserved a better fate. Being a game, true-running horse, with all a thoroughbred's virtues, he might have lasted through a long and honored racing career, but for his failure to rest during the winter.

A Real Champion.

WHILE Americans busily have been bowling over foreign athletes who have flocked to our shores during recent weeks, one invader has refused to be conquered. He is Charles Hoff, Norwegian allround athlete, who specializes at the pole vault.

Hoff has appeared in several vaulting events since his arrival here, and each time he not only distanced his rivals, but, vaulting in sweater and trousers, he broke the world's indoor record the first try and then smashed his own record on his next appearance.

From indications today, there seems no chance for an American athlete to surpass Hoff at his own specialty.

Hoff is another of those remarkable Scandinavians who have been coming to the fore since Hannes Kolehmainen, the Finnish long-distance star, first came up.

Record Close to 14 Feet.

AS A VAULTER Hoff is without a peer in the world, his record of 13 feet 11¾ inches surpassing all rivals by several inches. He uses a specially constructed pole of a length handled by no vaulter in America. He grips the bamboo at 13 feet from the grounding point. But the speed of his approach and the spring in his slender limbs are such that he is enabled to make the takeoff as easily as most vaulters do an 11-foot effort.

On the occasion of Hoff's first appearance here, illustrating how inferior the vaulters of America are, the measuring standard could not be raised beyond the limit of 13 feet 1 inch. At this figure Hoff cleared the bar by at least eight inches! And he wore a sweater and trousers.

Besides being a vaulter, Hoff is a runner of no mean quality. The night of his first American appearance he entered a middle distance running race with the country's best and finished a good third.

Hoff to Become an American.

HOFF, however, has announced that he will abandon all other athletic efforts except vaulting, until the indoor season ends. After which he hopes to resume running.

Hoff has announced his intention to remain in this country and already has taken out first papers.

In contrast with Hoff's success are the failures of Hubert Houben, the German sprinter, who failed to finish better than third in any of his sprints, and Goodwin, the British walker, who was hopelessly beaten in his first appearance in this country.

Adrien Paulen, the Belgian runner, likewise has yet to record a victory at middle distance, while Clas Thunberg, Finnish skater, was almost disgracefully beaten in the Canadian and other championships held in this country.

Clas, however, seems to have found himself of late, for he set two records recently in outdoor skating exhibitions.

Richards to Play Tilden in Final

Tennis Stars Capture Matches in Heights Casino Indoor Tourney.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—William T. Tilden and Vincent Richards, perennial rivals of netdom, enter upon the 1926 chapter of their long series tomorrow afternoon, as opponents in the final round of their annual indoor heights casino invitation tennis tournament.

Victory in the semifinals for each today marked the climax in a string of surprises on the eve of a national indoor championship next week, which will test American tennis supremacy on the board courts as never before. For France has sent three outstanding internationalists, Lacoste, Borotra, and Brugnon.

A preliminary foreign invasion whose thrust in the Casino tournament was masked by the unannounced arrival in this country of Erik Worms, Danish champion, and Maurice Ferrier, Swiss star, was finally turned back today by the skillful racquet of Richards. But it required the best that Richards could give to eliminate Ferrier at 6—4, 10—8, after the versatile Tilden in the other semifinal contest had vanquished the former indoor champion, Francis T. Hunter, 6—2, 6—2.

Ferrier, who easily disposed of Fred Anderson yesterday in straight sets, turned in another upset today by defeating the Spanish Davis Cup star, Manuel Alonso, in the quarter finals, 6—2, 4—6, 6—3. The Swiss star, then advanced on Richards. America's number 3 player and carried him through 28 hard fought games before the Yonkers youth clinched the match.

Tilden, extended yesterday in his first contest to defeat the West Side Club veteran, W. J. Gallon, was at his best today and Hunter at no stage of the contest was able to match the severe stroking and remarkable court-covering of the national champion.

Richards and Hunter will meet Tilden and Manuel Alonso in the finals of the doubles tomorrow, both teams having won their semi-final matches today. Richards and Hunter defeated H. C. Brunie and A. W. Asthalter of New York, 6—4, 6—4, while Tilden and Alonso defeated E. T. Herndon and Maurice Ferrier, 4—6, 6—3, 8—2.

Reilly to Play In Forward Line Of Vespers Today

Municipal League Star to Appear Against Ratican Club.

Larry Reilly, star inside left forward of the Morgan team of the Municipal League, will appear in the forward line of the Vespers in their match with the Ratican club afternoon at St. Louis University Field. Manager McCarthy has announced also that he will use Blackoff, formerly of the Ben Millers of the Municipal League, at left half back in place of Reid.

In the second game of the professional league double-header the Ben Millers will face the Wellstons. Manager Foley of the Millers has acquired the services of Raphael Tracy, formerly of the Vespers, and will use him in the halfback line today. He will also make use of Tommy White, halfback, who broke his leg in a game against the Boston club last spring.

With Bill Lehman fit for action the Wellstons will put a strong team in the field than usual against the Millers.

While the East was movement and idle last week and made no progress in national challenge round games, the Western teams went forward.

At Chicago, the Pullman club advanced to the second round through a 4—0 victory over Kenosha, and the Olympic Club battled the Canadian club to a 2—2 tie. Pullman will now engage the Bricklayers in their second round game. Until the Chicago clubs complete their second round matches, the St. Louis teams will not get any further action.

The most interesting phase of the competition, East or West, was the defeat of the Ben Millers by the Clan MacKenzie of Akron and the subsequent protest of the Millers who have proved that the MacKenzie's used two and possibly four ineligible men. A decision in the case of the protest is expected within a few days.

SMALL CROWD ON HAND

Only 500 Persons See Contests —Cleveland Loses Opener, 27 to 19.

Soldan High School upset the "dope" in the interscholastic basketball league, defeating Beaumont, 27-22, in an overtime game on the Roosevelt court last night. The defeat practically eliminated Beaumont from the championship race. Roosevelt gained its first victory of the season, winning over Cleveland, 27 to 19, in the opener.

The smallest crowd of the season, about 500 persons, witnessed the double header.

At the end of the game, the score in the Soldan-Beaumont game was knotted at 20-all, as the result of a last minute spurt by Beaumont. Behind 20-16, Spuering netted a field goal, while Thiele and Spuering made good on free throws to send the contest an extra five minutes.

Hobson Scores Three.

To start the extra period, Spuering tossed in a field goal for Beaumont, putting his team ahead, but Hobson, Soldan forward, came back with three field goals, while Christienson made good on a foul throw. Hobson scored his goals with ease as he was playing under the basket.

There was some booing of the referee during the second half. This was especially true, when a foul was called and Kemper was given a free throw.

Cleveland Off in Front.

Cleveland started with a rush and ran up a lead of six points in the first few minutes of the tilt with Roosevelt. However, after that the Roosevelt quintet, led by Forward Meier, started a bombardment of the basket, which gave the five a lead that was never lost. Near the close of the opening period, Cleveland drew within one point of its rival through some good work by Musgrove.

Starting the second half, two field goals by Hill and one by Sauselle brought the score to 18—11 in favor of Roosevelt, and from then on Cleveland was never able to make a real bid for front honors.

The game was fast throughout. Cleveland was unable to penetrate the Roosevelt defense. Sauselle and Musgrove were the stars of the contest.

Hoff Will Try to Pole Vault 14 Feet Outdoors

Norwegian Star Expects to Do 13 Feet 6 Inches Indoors — He Uses a 16-Foot Vaulting Pole.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Flooded with invitations to appear at track meets in all parts of the country, Charley Hoff of Norway, world's pole vault record holder, said today he would write to athletic authorities in his homeland for an extension of his permit to compete in the South, the Far West and Canada.

The popular Norwegian, who has thrice exceeded the American indoor record since his arrival, said he was anxious to respond to as many of the requests as possible, particularly as he wants to see America from coast to coast. Some of the 50 invitations he has received, however, cannot be filled, owing to conflicting dates.

Hoff, speaking through an interpreter, said he would continue the practice of bettering his own indoor record of 13 feet, 1½ inches, by an inch or two at each meet, although he has been soaring over the bar at least four or five inches above the old American record of 13 feet.

To Continue Drive On Record.

"It may be what you call superstition, or it may be common sense," he said. "I have my confidence and I don't want to lose it by attempting too much. I feel I can go considerably higher—perhaps as high as 13 feet, 6 inches indoors. But I want to approach my best mark by easy stages.

"Then, there is the crowd. Everywhere I go they will expect me to please them. I don't want to disappoint the spectators, and if I try too much at the start and then fail it will be bad for me and for athletics.

"If I am lucky and am feeling right, I may go over 14 feet outdoors next summer. I may get up two, three, four inches above 14 feet. I can't say. I will do my best."

To Compete Outdoors.

Texas and Washington may be the first states to see Hoff in outdoor performances, since the marvelous Norseman has been invited to compete in the former state during March and on the Pacific coast in May. He plans to compete at Baltimore on Feb. 27.

Other invitations include Hamilton, Ont., March 13; at the Texas University relays, Waco, Tex., March 26; Rice Institute relays, Houston, Tex., March 27; at Chicago April 8; Washington University relays, Seattle, Wash., May 1; and at Los Angeles, Cal., May 8.

Hoff said he had obtained a new 16-foot pole which he hoped to use during the outdoor season. The shaft on which he is now leaving to indoor records is a 14-foot pole, with a two-foot extension attached.

Hoff, who has competed in two U. S. meets thus far, set new records on both occasions.

He intends to become a citizen and has taken out his first papers.

He holds the world's record at 13 feet 11¾ inches.

Chicago Bowlers Again Defeat Cohen and Stein

Marino and Devito Total 3239 Against 3046 for St. Louis Pair.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 13.—Setting a whirlwind pace in the last three games, Dominick Devito and Hank Marino of Chicago, administered a decisive defeat to Ben Cohn and Otto Stein Jr., in an intercity bowling match here tonight. The Chicago pair won by a margin of 204 pins.

Marino and Devito totaled 3239, while Cohn and Stein collected 3046 pins. The Chicago pair began the series tonight with an advantage of 61, the margin gained over Cohn and Stein in the St. Louis match, rolled earlier in the week.

Marino and Devito were uncatchable tonight. Only by establishing a world record could the Mound City bowlers have overcome the masterly bowling of the local boys. For Marino and Devito made the highest total ever scored by a two-man team in competition. In the final three contests, Hank and Dominick totaled 1554.

Devito had games of 257, 270, and 246, while Marino accumulated totals of 268, 248, and 245.

Before this exhibition, the steadiness of Cohn's game gave away. Up to the sixth contest, his lowest score had been 223, but he slumped to 214 and 193 in the sixth and seventh game.

For a time it looked as if Stein and Cohn were going to give the local bowlers a real race for the honors. They regained 26 pins in the second game, to drop behind again in the third. But in the fourth both Stein and Cohn hit a steady stride, and rolled up scores of 236 and 234 respectively, while the Windy City pair got a brace of 203's. This one game gave the St. Louis combination the lead for the first time by a ten pin margin. But it melted away before the steady drives of the local stars in the last three games. Marino and Devito gained 59 pins in the sixth game alone.

Marino was the steadiest bowler of the evening, having an average of 233 4-7 with Devito second with 229 4-7. Cohn averaged 222 4-7 while Stein was last with 212 4-7.

Starting at three tomorrow, Devito will bowl Cohn in a singles contest while Marino and Stein will contest for honors at night.

Tonight's scores:

Cohn, 223, 255, 227, 254, 232, 214, 193—1558.

Stein, 210, 211, 150, 236, 235, 205, 201—1488—3046.

Devito, 205, 194, 221, 203, 257, 270, 246—1594.

Marino, 235, 226, 240, 203, 268, 248, 245—1635—3239.

TIGERS AND KANSAS IN ANNUAL INDOOR TRACK MEET THURSDAY

By the Associated Press.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Feb. 13.—With the twenty-third renewal of the annual Missouri-Kansas indoor track classic less than a week away, Coach Robert Simpson had settled down to a hard and intensive training of his Tiger squad with the hope of producing a team sufficiently strong to out-point the Jayhawks in Convention Hall, Kansas City, Feb. 18.

Inclement weather has prevented the Tiger squad from doing much outdoor training, but the Kansas team has been at the same disadvantage.

Coach Simpson is well pleased with the progress his team has made. Only the quarter-mile and the high hurdles loom as possible weak divisions.

During the last 22 years Missouri has won 18 of the indoor meets with Kansas.

Following the meet at Kansas City, Missouri will prepare for an engagement at Ames March 12 and 13.

Finnish Star Shatters 880-Yard and Mile and a Half Standards.

By the Associated Press.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y. Feb. 13.—Clas Thunberg of Finland, Olympic skating champion, broke two more world's records today, in the final day of local competition, giving him three world marks in two days out of four races skated. His match racing with Charles Jewtraw, Lake Placid flash, will be continued at Saranac Lake Monday and Tuesday. Tewtraw's only victory was in the 220-yard sprint yesterday.

The Finn beat the world mark for the half-mile by one second and for the mile and a half by 15 2-5 seconds. The half-mile was fast from the start, with Thunberg leading and Jewtraw at his heels all the way. After the final turn, Jewtraw started to sprint in an effort to pass Thunberg but fell, sliding over the line several feet behind Thunberg. The victor's time was 1m. 15 1-5s, beating the record of 1m. 16 1-5s. made by Jewtraw at Lake Placid in 1923.

In the mile and a half race Thunberg again took the lead from the start, with Jewtraw trailing for five laps. In the fifth lap Jewtraw fell, being thrown by a hole in the soft ice. Thunberg kept up the pace, which had been almost a sprint from the start, for the remaining four laps, beating by 15 2-5s. the record of 4m. 28s., made by John S. Johnson 32 years ago. Thunberg's time was 4m. 12 3-5s.

CHAMPION STECHER CHALLENGED BY PESEK

Joe Stecher, world's wrestling champion, has been challenged by John Pesek, the Nebraska grappler, and will not be offered any more bouts in St. Louis under Tom Packs' management unless he agrees to meet Pesek, according to a statement given out last night by Packs' publicity agent.

The statement said Pesek in a letter to Packs had offered to pay Stecher "or any other recognized contender" $5000 for agreeing to meet Pesek, who would give Stecher or the contender the winner's and loser's share of the purse if Pesek failed to beat him two out of three falls. The publicity agent also said Packs had tried to get Stecher to agree to a Pesek match after the Londos-Stecher match here Wednesday.

BAGENBAGGAGE IS WINNER IN ST. VALENTINE HANDICAP

Bradley's Horse Two Lengths in Front at Finish

Sea Rocket Closes Fast to Capture Second Place, With Golden Mac Third.

LOUNGER IS VICTOR

Trims John T. D. and Friday the 13th in Secondary Feature at New Orleans.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Feb. 13.—Bagenbaggage, Col. E. R. Bradley's chestnut colt, gave further evidence that he will be a hard horse to defeat in the fifth renewal of the Louisiana Derby, by winning the St. Valentine Handicap, mile contest for 3-year-olds, today at Fair Grounds. He trimmed virtually the same rivals that will oppose him in the closing day stake. He was an odds on choice.

When the mile was completed, Bagenbaggage held a margin of two lengths over Sea Rocket and didn't show any signs of tiring, despite his efforts during the early part of the contest, when he was obliged to outfoot the speedy Ferrash and Golden Mac. Golden Mac held on long enough to take third money in a creditable manner.

Sea Rocket Comes Fast.

Bagenbaggage was hustled away from the post and got the best of the break, which was a poor send-off. Jockey Eric Blind, who was astride the strapping Bradley colt, took hold of his head and Ferrash and Golden Mac ran up close behind the pacemaker. After three-quarters, Ferrash was through and Golden Mac took up the task of catching Bagenbaggage, but he was not equal to it and faltered in the stretch run, while Bagenbaggage was in full stride and under a slight pull during the final sixteenth.

Sea Rocket is not to be overlooked when Derby candidates are discussed and he demonstrated this in convincing manner. It is true that he caught the others tiring in the final eighth, but he came from far back at the stretch turn. He trailed the field for the first quarter.

Most of the crowd held tickets on Bagenbaggage and received $1 for every $2 invested.

Lounger Wins Another.

J. L. Burtschell's consistent gelding Lounger scored another victory in the Screen Advertiser's Purse, mile and a sixteenth race in which four horses started. John T. D. finished second and Friday the 13th third. Emissary was the other starter.

Lounger was an odd-on favorite and didn't give his backers any worry after getting to the front in the stretch.

Cyclops returned to his good form and won the Old Glory Handicap, a five and a half furlong dash, in impressive manner. It was a thrilling finish and H. Massey's black horse beat Boot to Boot a head, with T. S. Jordan, the early pacemaker, a half length further back. Chick Lang had the mount on the winner.

Columbia Takes Sprint.

Columbia won the second, a six-furlong contest, which brought out a half dozen good sprinters. Columbia had a comfortable margin with Nettie Sweep in second place. Little Visitor took third. D. Frogate was astride the winner. Columbia was rushed into the lead in the first quarter and never relinquished the forward position. The chestnut mare's margin of victory was two lengths.

St. Louis Golf Pro Invents Self-Instruction Mirror

BENNY RICHTER—golf professional at the Triple A Club, has invented a self-instructing mirror designed to make it easy for a golfer to practice shots outlined by the pros.

The device, which Richter has patented under the name "Visiform," consists of a frame with a central mirror and ledges above and around the mirror to hold a series of pictures. Each series is an abbreviated "slow movie," showing the proper stance, club recession, top of swing, impact against ball and the follow through.

The player can stand in front of the mirror, see himself at any point of the swing and then compare it with the proper position shown in the slow movie series, which will be of a noted stylist making a stroke. The mirror is convex, reducing the golfer's reflection to the size of the photograph. Thus the golfer can compare his own form with perfect golf form at the six progressive stages of the stroke.

Glorifying the American Tobacco

Women are getting back to those terrible short dresses again. A Missionary just arrived from Africa, after being gone for ten years among the Zulus, claims that their native women's dress looks like an Esquimo's in comparison to ours. He says he never saw such indecency. I never saw such legs!

Some women that are wearing short dresses must never have looked backwards over their shoulder into a long mirror. The reason they go to see the girls in Mr. Ziegfeld's Follies is not that we show any more than the street, but that Ziegfeld picks the ones you see here, and the ones on the street pick themselves.

If Ziegfeld selected every woman that was allowed to wear short skirts on the street, what an artistic world this would be.

I often wonder what a sales girl's conscience does when she sells a short skirt to some women.

Every sack of "Bull" Durham is shapely, perfect, and uniform. It's picked with the same care as a Follies Girl. Smoke a National Institution.

Miss Wills Hardest Hitter in World, French Girl Says

By the Associated Press.

CANNES, France, Feb. 13.

MLLE. COSETTE ST. OMER ROY, a petite French woman ranking among the first 20 players of France who was defeated today by Helen Wills, the American champion, possesses the strongest forehand drive of any woman tennis player of her country, excepting Mlle. Billout. She has met Suzanne Lenglen several times and always lost, but managed to win a few games from the mighty champion.

"What do you think of the respective chances of Suzanne and Helen?" the correspondent of the Associated Press asked her.

Mlle. Cosette swallowed hard and said:

"No player in the world can return balls hit so hard in the corners of the court. I have played Suzanne many times, but have never felt the manifest inferiority I experienced today before Miss Wills."

By the Associated Press.

CANNES, France, Feb. 13.—Suzanne Lenglen and Helen Wills, after three rounds played in the Carlton tennis tournament, both have reached the quarter finals without the loss of a game. Helen has granted her adversaries a few more points than Suzanne, but experts can glean nothing in the way of the comparative chances of the two champions in their forthcoming singles match, set for 11 o'clock Tuesday morning, except that the two greatest women tennis players have styles almost as far apart as the North and South poles.

Mlle. Lenglen won her match against Miss Mary Cambridge, 6-0, 6-0, and Miss Wills defeated Mlle. Cosette Stomer Roy by the same score. Suzanne's greatest desire seemed to be not to lose a point and she played fast and hard against Miss Cambridge, a little English player, who is hardly in Lenglen's class.

Helen Experiments.

Helen was calm and cool and appeared to relish the severe stroking of Mlle. Roy. Being desirous of testing the speed of her forehand drive, she indulged in experiments with several new strokes.

The French champion never took a chance, capturing the point at the first opportunity. The American girl many times could have ended long rallies, but seemed as if she wanted her opponent to play to her backhand in order to obtain practice against a player schooled by Suzanne.

Hard, clean tennis on the courts came as a relief to the political-financial tennis which has been played in the rooms of the committee during the past few rainy days. No one seemed to care whether the business-like moving picture men obtained exclusive rights to film the match, and when it was announced that the proposed contract was off there was hardly a ripple on the surface of the tennis life of the Riviera.

Advance in Doubles.

The battle for the filming rights and for other concessions is apparently forgotten now that the meeting between the French and American champions is practically a certainty.

Both Mlle. Lenglen and Miss Wills also made their way into the quarter-finals of the women's doubles today.

Paired with Mlle. Vlasto, Suzanne defeated Miss Dallett and Mrs. Westcott 6—0, 6—0, while Miss Wills and her partner, Mlle. Cantoslavos, defeated Mrs. R. Young and Miss M. Greene, 6—0, 6—2.

Betting on the final singles has taken on a somewhat different aspect from that of a few days ago, and not more than 3 to 1 on the French champion to win is available. The great question even among the blase Baccarat players is "who is going to win the Lenglen-Wills match?"

JONES AND ARMOUR BEAT DIEGEL AND SARAZEN

By the Associated Press.

SARASOTA, Fla., Feb. 13.—Bobby Jones, American amateur champion, paired with Tommy Armour, West Coast champion, today defeated Gene Sarazen, Metropolitan champion, and Leo Diegel, Canadian open title holder, 3 up and 2 to play, in a 36-hole match over the Whitfield Estates Country Club course.

Jones led in the medal score with a 72. Diegel was second with 141. Sarazen was next with 145, while Armour came in with a 150. Armour is suffering great pain during the match as the result of a sciatic attack.

With-- Rod and Reel —By— ALEC MERMOD

NOW is the time to overhaul your fishing outfit and see that everything is in perfect condition, so that you will be ready to start at a minute's notice.

Test out your casting lines inch by inch and if you are in doubt as to their condition, throw them away or lay them aside and buy new ones.

It is very seldom that casting lines retain their strength through two seasons. So, go over your fly lines very carefully, test for strength and see that there are no abrasions in the enamel or dressing.

Polish the line with some dressing, such as mucelin, with a little graphite added, you will find that this will add to the life of your line.

Do not attempt to use last year's leaders that have been in use, and only use new leaders which have not been exposed to light, for such exposure will ruin the finest got leader very quickly.

Take a look at your rod and see that guides and ferrules are tight. Our changeable climate is hard on split bamboo rods, to say nothing of exposure to artificial heat, causing the cement to dry out during the winter.

Lest We Forget.

BEFORE starting out on your first trip supply yourself with a fishing license and be sure that you have it with you.

Fish may be taken with any sort of lure until April 10. From that date until June 1 hook and line may be used baited with dead fish, live minnows or worms; no artificial bait may be used. This applies to artificial flies as well as the deadly wooden minnow or dowagiac.

Fishermen are divided into three classes, i. e., the fly caster, the bait caster and still fisherman, and each class has many adherents. The last named probably has the largest following, as it includes the small boy with his 5-cent line and willow branch pole along with a can of worms, the scores of picnickers of both sexes going out on Sundays and holidays up to the "old-timer," who scorns the new-fangled stuff, and still sticks to his "pole" equipped with a heavy line, cork, sinker and hook baited with worm or minnow, once in a while trying a "plug."

There are still a few disciples of Izaak Walton who prefer "still" fishing to casting with either a fly rod or the short bait rod, who have adopted a little more scientific method of landing a fish by using a reel instead of trying to throw his catch over the tops of the trees.

About Casting Rods.

IT has only been a few years since the short casting rod came into use. Before that it was either a fly rod or bait rod both made of split bamboo and of about the same length, only the bait rod was much heavier and, of course, had the reel seat above the hand.

The same care was taken in building each rod, though the bait rod was a little lower in price.

When the short casting rod came into favor the long bait rod was gradually discarded until now the high-grade rod of this style is not carried in stock but is built only to order.

While the fly rod has been in use for a great many years, long before the advent of the short bait rod, it was not really popular in this part of the country until just a few years ago (comparatively speaking).

Fishermen had the idea that a light fly rod was intended only for trout fishing, but since the more daring proved that both large and small mouth bass would readily rise to a fly and could be landed with a light rod and tackle, fly fishing has become quite popular and followers of this style of angling are increasing in numbers each year.

Help! Help!

WE DESIRE to give our readers a column of real fishing "dope," and trust we will be able to please all "Waltonians" as well as The Hunting Call seemed to please the "nimrods."

This column will not only contain the usual instructive information such as the selection of rods, lines, reels, etc., but we expect to give full information regarding the various lakes and streams in Missouri and Illinois, the condition of the water, best routes to reach these places and lures that are most attractive to fish.

Since the "Liar's Roost," where all sorts of fishing information formerly was broadcast is no longer in existence, we are asking the old members of the roost to help out once in awhile by passing out such information as may be of interest to fishermen.

Reports from Black River, near Piedmont say that some very nice bass already have been taken, but minnows were the attraction. Crappie are biting in Spanish Lake, several large ones were taken last Sunday.

Gold Stick Wins In Feature Race At Miami Track

Old Slip and Accomplish, Unbeaten 2-Year-Old, Set New Records.

By the Associated Press.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 13.—Archibald Barkley's Gold Stick beat Sir Peter half a length in the Okeechobee Highweight Handicap feature race at Hialeah Park this afternoon. Callahan rode the 4-year-old son of Golden Broom. Gold Stick was the favorite. The winner's portion amounted to $6170. Sir Peter closed strongly on the rail, taking second money from Missionary. Brainstorm was fourth.

Another record crowd was present.

The feature race developed a real thrill. Worthmore, carrying top weight, showed in front shortly after the break. Brainstorm took the lead from him straightening out, but weakened in a drive, and Gold Stick, having raced close to the pace from the start of the six furlongs came around him gamely in the final drive. Sir Peter was out run, but finished strongly.

Two Marks Established.

Old Slip beat Picketer a head and Picketer beat Golden Spire a head in a long drive to the end of the mile and seventy yards of the Tallahassee Handicap. Noe rode the winner wearing the silks of L. T. Cooper.

Norwester made the early pace, but stopped when the real racing began and those which had been racing close to him moved up. The leaders advanced closely bunched and Old Slip began to draw away very slowly in the last few strides. He broke the track record made by King's Ransom a few days ago, running the race in 1:42 1-5, two-fifths of a second faster than King's Ransom.

The Kaw Stable's unbeaten two-year-old bay filly, Accomplish, set her second track record in three starts when she galloped home in front of a good band of juveniles. She lowered the track record for three and a half furlongs by two-fifths of a second. The old record stood at :41 3-5. C. S. Pierce's The Heathen finished second and Phil T. Chinn's Edna Celnn third.

Following the pace set by Edna Glenn, Accomplish went around the leaders at the stretch turn and drew out in the last sixteenth and held The Heathen safe in the final drive.

Accomplish set a track record for the one-quarter mile course here Jan. 29, running the distance in :22 4-5.

Perfetti, Mike Sansone's Next Rival, Has Never Been Floored

Local Battler Will Face Boxer With Largest Reach Among Flyweights at Armory Tuesday — St. Louisan Is in Shape for 10-Round Battle.

The flyweight bout between Mike Sansone of this city and Lou Perfetti, New York favorite, arranged as the 10-round headliner of next Tuesday night's boxing program at the Armory arena, will bring together two battlers of widely different types.

SANSONE.

Sansone, who reigned over the Western A. A. U. flyweights for two years and who was deprived of a national championship by the blunder of a referee in the Boston tourney last spring, is an infighter and a slashing body puncher.

Perfetti is reputed to be a skillful scientific boxer with a longer reach than any other topnotch flyweight. In a recent bout with Eddie "Cannonball" Martin, former bantam king and a battler of Sansone's type, Perfetti won the decision by his long range boxing tactics.

Perfetti Never Floored.

From this comparions, it seems that Sansone's chances of victory depend upon his ability to crowd his way through the rangy New Yorker's guard and force Perfetti to fight at close quarters.

John O'Brien, manager of Perfetti, claims his man has never been floored in a total of more than 30 professional bouts. In his seven professional bouts, Sansone has dropped his opponents 14 times.

Sansone Owns a "Haymaker."

Every fighter who has faced the local midget since Sansone stepped out of the amateur ranks, has suffered at least one knockdown, though only one of the seven was counted out. Joe Luippold, whom he stopped in the third round of a recent contest at Hannibal, Mo., is the lone kayo victim.

Daily training workouts in which Sansone has taken on such rugged sparring partners as Bud McHale, Bill Johnson, Ray Alfano and Ray Palmer at the Business Men's gym, have convinced local followers that the former amateur is in top shape for his coming shindig.

Perfetti will establish local training quarters at the Red Ball Gymnasium, according to an announcement by Matchmaker Harry Cook.

Bear Grid Star Enters St. L. U.

Barney Miller, 200-Pound Tackle, Starred Against Ames.

Gordon (Barney) Miller, husky tackle on the Washington University gridiron squad last fall and barred recently from athletics by scholastic ineligibility, has entered St. Louis University and will complete the second semester there.

Because of the Missouri Valley Conference rules, which the Billikens are following, although not a member school, Miller will not be available for the varsity squad until the 1927 season and will not wear the Blue and White jersey next fall. This is in conformity with the regulation requiring at least one year's residence at a school before participation in varsity sports.

Miller will have a year and a half residence and will have a chance to improve his scholastic standing by the time he is ready for the varsity. Unless he has a high rating in his studies by this time, he will also be ruled ineligible by the St. Louis U. authorities.

Miller was a first-year man last year with the Bears, but proved a sensation. He is over six feet tall, weighs about 200 pounds and is cool and heady. His outstanding performance last season was an 88-yard run for touchdown against Ames after recovering a fumble.

The choicest grades of this tobacco are the most expensive tobaccos in the world. The Sumatra wrapper used on BLACKSTONE CIGARS is from the recognized finest plantations of the Island of Sumatra, and is selected with a view solely to quality.

We assure you unhesitatingly, from our knowledge based on fifty years of experience, that it would be impossible to make a finer quality, extremely mild cigar, no matter at what price it were to be sold, for the reason that there is no finer tobacco in the world from which it could be made.

BLACKSTONE CIGARS are extremely mild, yet aromatic and fragrant, and are made in a clean way amid clean surroundings.

Yours very truly,

Zev the Illustrious

The Life of Earl Sande

As Told by the Jockey to a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

CHAPTER XI

(Copyright, 1926.)

IF it were possible to ask the one hundred and ten million or so persons in the United States to mention the name of the race horse which occurred to them first, I believe the answers would show Zev to be the best-known thoroughbred in America.

Zev's name is familiar to thousands of persons who have never seen a horse race and who know nothing whatever of the sport. To the turf he holds a relationship much the same as Babe Ruth holds to baseball. Advertising has spread their fame.

It used to be said that Salvator was the best advertised race horse in the history of the American turf. But Salvator's reign was in a day when the facilities for broadcasting news were limited. There were fewer telegraph lines, fewer newspapers, fewer magazines, and radio was unheard of. Hence it was out of the question for Salvator's deeds to receive the publicity which Zev attracted in various notable ways.

Before telling my own experience with this celebrated horse, a brown son of The Finn-Miss Kearney, I am going to give a few facts concerning him. The most conspicuous is that his total earnings of $313,639.66 in the three years he campaigned are a world's record. Here is his record as it stands:

Age.	Sts.	1st	2d	3d	unp.	AMOUNT
2	12	5	4	2	1	$ 24,665.00
3	14	12	1	0	1	272,008.00
4	17	6	3	3	5	16,996.66
	43	23	8	5	7	$313,639.66

His greatest race was the overthrow of the English Derby winner, Papyrus, in a race that attracted the attention of the world. His triumphs included also the Kentucky Derby, the Lawrence Realization, Grand Union Hotel, Albany Handicap, Autumn Championship, the Belmont, Withers, Pimlico Serial No. 3, Queens County, Rainbow, Paumonok, Kings County, Pimlico Serial No. 1, and the match against In Memoriam, together with second in the Futurity, Latonia Championship and other classic stakes.

Zev-Papyrus Stands Out As Most-Talked-of Turf Event of All Time

THE International, which brought Zev, the winner of the Kentucky Derby, and Papyrus, winner of the English Derby, is entitled to the place of honor as the most talked-of turf event of all time. To begin with, it was the first time that winners of the two Derbies had ever met in a special race. The enormous size of the stake, $100,000, of which $80,000 and a cup were to be the winner's portion and $20,000 the loser's, was in itself sufficient to attract world-wide attention to the race. Supplementing this was the interest taken in the presence of Steve Donoghue, the English jockey, as Papyrus' rider.

None of us could see how the English horse, as game and fast as he was, could possibly beat Zev under the conditions. The trip across the Atlantic, the change in climate and insufficient time for Papyrus to tighten himself up for a test of this kind, all led us to believe that the English invader was in for a thrashing.

The point of this race to me was the fact that the issue was settled almost before we had gotten into action. My instructions were to hold Zev off the pace if Papyrus showed a desire to travel at a fast clip in the heavy going and to assume the lead if Zev could take it without rushing him. We had hardly settled into our stride when I realized that the latter course was the proper one. Zev took command without the slightest effort and I merely rated him along in front, ready for any challenge from our English rival. Though under restraint, Zev increased the distance between him and Papyrus with each stride, and I quickly realized I was riding a horse which was far superior that day. Going down the backstretch he was merely breezing; coming around the turn for home he was running well within himself, and from then on to the finish he was never in the slightest danger, crossing the line five lengths in front of Donoghue's mount.

The race had been run exactly as the Rancocas Stable had expected. It had really been decided in the first quarter of a mile and turned out to be one of the quickest decisions to an important race I have ever known.

Zev After Disappointiny Showing in the Preakness, Wins the Kentucky Derby

ZEV was a glutton for work. As Mr. Hildreth often said, it would kill any ordinary thoroughbred to try to keep step with him in the morning workouts. In this 3-year-old form he fell into cunning habits, and instead of being a front runner as he had been as a 2-year-old he developed a way of refusing to employ his best speed unless he could see some other horse ahead of him.

The first exhibition of this peculiar trait came in the tightening up spins preparatory to his appearance in important stakes, and it was not until later in the season that he manifested the same characteristic in actual racing. As it was too much of a task for any one horse to eat up work as he did, Mr. Hildreth devised a plan of using two, the first to carry him along over the early part of the journey and the second to pick him up at about the half way mark and finish out with him. But Zev quickly caught on to this trick. After he had been fooled once or twice, he would stop when the first horse drew up and would refuse to budge a step after that, except at an easy gallop.

The Rancocas Stable had high hopes of winning both the Preakness and Kentucky Derby of 1922 with Zev. On the day of the Preakness he was strongly fancied by the public, but his race proved a great disappointment to his admirers. The performance was put down as an exceedingly bad one, and it was not even generally known that the poor showing was caused by an injury he sustained in the race. But his managers knew of this and did not lose faith in him. The following Saturday odds against him soared to nearly 20 to 1, because of the belief that he was out of condition. This was much higher than his price had been in the future books on this classic. Through the winter and spring Zev had been held as one of the choices.

Dave Leary, Mr. Hildreth's chief assistant, was in charge of Zev on the Kentucky trip. The day before the race he was anxious to put him through a stiff work, but there was no other horse to accompany him. With an exercise boy on his back, Zev sprinted about two furlongs and then seeing that he was alone he bore over sharply toward the rail with the intention of reducing his speed to a plain canter. Leary and I were watching him through field glasses as he made this move.

And then a curious thing happened. At the very moment Zev was slowing down there was a thudding of hoofs behind him as another horse out for an early morning trial came tearing along the track. Zev heard the old familiar tatoo, saw the fleeting form of the other horse out of the corner of his eye and at once set sail after him. He pursued him around the bend and all through the stretch at a merry clip and finally pulled up after one of the best workouts he had in a long time. I've always believed this accidental happening had a pronounced bearing on the result of the Kentucky Derby next day. It freshed Zev up in exactly the manner required for the difficult task ahead of him.

Zev's race in the Derby takes its place in my recollections as one of the two most interesting turf battles I have ever figured in. Our plan of action was to make the most of his early speed in the early running without distressing him and then to hold him together for the remainder of the journey if he began showing signs of fatigue.

The next installement of Earl Sande's story will appear in the Post-Dispatch next Sunday.

Liberalism in the Dumps, Says Lloyd George; Masses Care Only for Prosperity

Italians Seem to Approve Loss of Their Liberties if Work Continues Plentiful—The Uncertain Situation in England.

By DAVID LLOYD GEORGE,
Former Premier of England.

LONDON, Feb. 6 (By Cable).

RECENT episodes have once more forced discussion on the prospects of Liberalism. Not only in Britain but throughout the whole world it seems to have fallen on evil days. In Europe the reaction against it seems to be in full swing.

Liberty is no longer the popular appeal. Now the nations only respond to material allurements. Whether the appeals come from the right or from the left—the call is not toward ideals but relates to property, capital, trade, profits, wages or taxation.

It is an inevitable consequence of the catastrophe that has impoverished and burdened the people in almost every land. In such an atmosphere, Liberalism always has and always will wilt and droop.

In Italy, I found the most powerful newspapers suppressed and confiscated because they had dared mildly to criticise the Government — public meetings and demonstrations banned—deputies elected to the Italian Parliament excluded from their seats by violence. Force everywhere trampling freedom. But I discovered no signs of popular resentment with this ruthless despotism. Quite the reverse. Frankly, I would say that it was thoroughly popular.

Italy is prospering. Mills and factories are throbbing with life. New works are springing up everywhere. Old industries are thriving and new industries are coming into being. There is no time to worry about liberty. And no one does except leisured intellectuals who can afford to brood over the application to Italy of the old saying that "man doth not live by bread alone." So it comes to pass that, for some time to come, Liberalism in that fair land is a despised back number.

How Sick Is Liberalism?

What about Britain? The favorite gibe of the shallow politician here is that "the Liberal party is dead." A party that polls three million votes at its worst moment has obviously some distance yet to walk ere it reaches the cemetery. But is it dying? Conservatives and Socialists say it is and Liberals keep assuring themselves and others that it is not. You should never take the opinion of testuary legatees as to the health of a relative.

On the other hand, you should not listen too implicitly to the sick man who informs you that his health is improving, that he is feeling much stronger and that he will soon be all right. One must form his own judgment on a thorough diagnosis.

What are the facts? War, always and everywhere, is damaging to the health of Liberalism. War is a resort to brute force and in order effectively to wage it, liberty is suspended. So, during war, Liberal ideas fare badly. Since the war, the weather has been unpropitious for the recovery of Liberalism. The bitter east wind that has blown across Europe from the steppes of Russia has proved fatal to Liberal convalescence. At the last election, this fierce and poisonous blast drove Liberalism indoors to save its life.

At the Armistice election of 1918, the Conservatives of all sections polled about 4,500,000 votes—the Liberals of both sections, Coalition and Independent, polled, in the aggregate, 2,800,000 and Labor of all sections 2,000,000. At the election of 1922, immediately after the break-up of the coalition, the Conservatives polled 5,565,000 votes—Liberals of both sections 4,113,000 and Labor 4,241,000. At the election fought in 1923 on the issue of free trade versus protection, the Conservatives polled 5,544,000 votes. The Liberals reunited their forces three weeks before the election and polled 4,314,000 votes. The Labor score came to 4,500,000.

Million Voters Scared Away.

It will be observed that up to this election Liberal and Labor ran neck to neck—Labor, on the whole, forging ahead. Conservatism maintains throughout a distinct advantage over each of the others but not over both. At all these elections, the Conservatives have been an emphatic minority of the electorate and, up to the last election, the distance between their poll and that recorded for each of the other two parties had been steadily diminishing.

Then came the Zinovieff election of 1924. Why is it known by that name? Because the publication of the Zinovieff correspondence on the eve of the poll created a panic which swept at least a million Liberal votes into the Tory camp and stirred the nonpolitical elector to cast his vote for the first time.

It will be recollected that the Zinovieff document revealed a design on the part of the communists to tamper with the army and navy, with a view to making easy the path of the revolutionaries. It was recalled that the Bolshevik revolution in Russia was brought about by that expedient. The quiet people in Britain were frightened out of habits and traditions and saw red terror at their doors. They rushed to the polling booths as they would to a shrine to avert the evil which was upon them.

I shall always retain a vivid memory of the last meeting I addressed before the poll. I had been traveling through my constituency, a chain of boroughs at the foot of the mountains of Snowdonia. When I reached Carnarvon county town, about 10 o'clock at night, I found an immense concourse of men and women thronging the square outside the walls of that fine fortress built by Edward the First and which is, undoubtedly, the finest medieval castle in Europe. They had stood there for some time in the pouring rain. I felt it would be cruel to detain them much longer, so I made a short speech on what I conceived to be the main issues of the election.

Routed by a Fear.

When I ceased speaking, the crowd still remained without moving until a well-known resident came up to me and said: "Won't you tell us something about Zinovieff?" I responded to his wish. But as soon as I said "I understand you wish me to speak about Zinovieff," a shuddering hush that could be felt in the dark, fell upon the multitude and I realized for the first time the horror that had thrilled the land. Next day came the election and the effect of the Bolshevik banshee was visible everywhere. Men and women who are frightened never run half way. They go the whole distance for safety. Liberals fled to the extent of over 1,000,000 right into the Tory quarters—that being the furthest point from Bolshevism. The result was the greatest disaster that befell Liberalism since the days of the Napoleonic wars. This is how the figures worked out: Conservatives, 7,838,000; Labor, 5,423,000; Liberals, 2,925,000.

It was indeed a rout for the Liberal party. The electorate aimed a shattering blow at Socialism. It hit Liberalism with full force and stunning effect. The Socialists increased their poll by nearly a million. The Liberal debacle resembled, in some of its features and

Strange Story of a Troubled Nation Run For Ten Years by U. S. Marines And One Powerful New York City Bank

Conditions in Haiti Told by Returned Priest and Other Investigators—Brighter Side Shows Material Benefits to Country at Cost of Personal Liberty and Self Government.

By Paul Y. Anderson.
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 13.

ALTHOUGH nominally a free and independent nation, the little Republic of Haiti has been occupied and virtually governed by a force of United States Marines, acting under orders from the State Department and the Navy Department. The occupation has been violently resisted by the Haitians, and has been widely criticised in the United States as a military invasion of a friendly country.

Among the latest critics is the Rev. Father Raymond A. McGowan, assistant to Dr. John A. Ryan, famous social authority and director of the Division on Social Action of the National Catholic Welfare Council, which is composed of all the Catholic bishops in America. Father McGowan recently returned from a trip of inspection and study in Haiti. He declared to the writer that the outstanding consequences of the occupation were the following:

1. Free government and civil liberty have been destroyed.

2. The National City Bank of New York, a Rockefeller institution, has acquired complete dominion over Haitian finances.

3. A nation of independent farmers is rapidly being transformed into a nation of plantation laborers, and their farms are being absorbed into plantations owned by American corporations.

Minor consequences, he went on, included the compulsory adoption of a new Constitution, written in the Navy Department at Washington, the imprisonment of hundreds of Haitian leaders for protesting against the occupation, and the killing of hundreds of Haitians by the Marines and the Marine-officered gendarmerie.

Under the occupation, he said, the civil government of Haiti has become an ignominious shell, without power except to concur in the recommendations of the American High Commissioner, Brigadier-General John H. Russell of the Marines. The national revenue is collected by an American official, who designates the purposes for which it may be spent. And the first purpose to which it is applied is the payment of interest and principal of the Haitian debt, to New York bankers. The salaries of Haitian officials who refuse to carry out orders are withheld until they submit.

Free Speech Denied.

Under a remarkable order issued by former Secretary Denby, of the Navy—an order which strongly resembles a law against lese majesty—any Haitian who criticises the American occupation may be tried before a provost court, composed of Marines. Haitians who resisted the occupation have been hunted down by the Marines. A Senate committee which investigated the occupation in 1921 estimated the number of Haitians killed by the Marines at about 1500, including many women, children and non-combatants. However, it justified the killings as necessary for the preservation of order.

Many of the facts alleged by the critics are not denied by the Navy Department, but a different face is placed upon them. It contends that all these measures were necessary for the rehabilitation of the country and the restoration of order, and that there has been no unnecessary force. It points, moreover, to the many material improvements that have been made in the island under Marine control.

That many physical improvements have been made, seems proven. That there has been wanton tyranny or unnecessary cruelty, save in isolated instances, seems improbable. What has happened appears simply to have been the inevitable consequences of the occupation of one country by the armed forces of another country. Military occupations have never been celebrated for their nice consideration of the occupied country's rights or feelings.

This question of whether the Americans have any right there, colors every opinion concerning the occupation. The justice or injustice of the conduct of the force of opposition hinges largely on it.

Thus, to the Marines, the rebellious natives are "bandits," and their revolutionary attacks are "bandit raids." To the Haitians who want their independence restored, the rebels are patriotic heroes, sacrificing their lives in the cause of freedom. The State and Navy Departments say the Marines are there to preserve order and restore peace. The Haitians and their American friends say it is no business of the State and Navy Departments to preserve order or restore peace in Haiti.

REV. RAYMOND A. McGOWAN

The Marine Corps officers say that the punishments imposed on the Haitians were necessary for the protection of the occupationary forces. The Haitians reply that the Germans made the same defense of their conduct in Belgium. The merits of the criticisms therefore depend largely upon the justification of the occupation itself.

The history of that occupation is the subject of a chapter in a new book called "Dollar Diplomacy," by Scott Nearing and James Freeman, noted liberal writers and lecturers, who criticise it at length in the most scathing language. Father McGowan told the writer that his observations had uniformly confirmed the statements in the book.

How We Got There.

It is the conclusion of all three that the occupation resulted from two converging policies. One was the determination of the United States Navy to get a base there; the other was the determination of the National City Bank to acquire control of the country's finances.

Haiti is one of the oldest republics in the Western Hemisphere. It won its independence from France in 1804, after many years of an existence comparable to that of Cuba under Spanish rule. The country has a population of 3,000,000, mostly small farmers. The inhabitants are predominantly black, being a mixture of Negroes and Indians. Despite many revolutions, a committee of 24 distinguished American lawyers, which studied the question a few years ago, reported that no American citizen had ever been molested, either in life or property, and concluded that "Haiti has never manifested hostility to the United States, and has given no occasion for our intervention in her affairs." Dr. Tyrell Williams, of Washington University Law School, St. Louis, was a member of this committee.

As early as 1891 the Navy Department made an effort to acquire a base on the Mole St. Nicholas, on the Haitian west coast. The Haitian Government declined even to discuss the proposal, on the ground that it would be a violation of Haiti's sovereignty.

The country's treasury, since 1881, had been administered by the National Bank of Haiti. This bank was reorganized in 1910, and certain French banks acquired an interest in it. Secretary of State Knox objected, announcing that "some American banks should be included." He called a conference of bankers in New York. As a result, several American banks, including the National City Bank of New York, were allowed to buy stock.

Soon after the European war began, Secretary of State Bryan suggested that all foreign shares in the bank should be acquired by Americans. Accordingly, the French interests sold out to the National City, which also acquired the other American shares, and thus became the sole owner of the National Bank of Haiti. A somewhat similar situation can be imagined by picturing the acquisition of the Bank of England by German or American bankers. It was a situation likely to breed trouble, and it succeeded.

Almost immediately Secretary Bryan proposed to the Haitian Government that the State Department be allowed to take control of the Haitian customs. This would mean that the collection of Haitian taxes, and their expenditure as well, would be in the hands of foreigners. Apparently there is no doubt that the purpose of this proposal was to insure the payment of the Haitian Government's obligations to the National City Bank. In 1914 and 1915 this proposal was made five times and indignantly rejected every time. On one occasion, Bryan's proposal took the form of an offer to guarantee that the incumbent Haitian President would be kept in power, by force if necessary, if he would consent. Both he and his successor declined the offer.

"One week later," Nearing and Freeman relate, "a contingent of American Marines landed at Port Au Prince (the national capital), marched to the vaults of the National Bank of Haiti, and in broad daylight seized $500,000 and carried it aboard the gunboat Machias. The money was transferred to New York and deposited in the vaults of the National City Bank. No explanations were ever given.

Marines Take Charge.

"Several years later, before a Senate investigating committee, Roger L. Farnham, president of the National City Bank, admitted that this raid was arranged by his bank and the State Department. One purpose appears to have been that of forcing the Haitian Government, by depriving it of funds, to sign a treaty turning over the customs. Bryan at that time wired to Admiral Caperton, in Haitian waters, to warn the Haitian Government that any attempt on its part to remove funds from the bank would be met by forcible means "to protect the rights of foreign stockholders."

In defense of the action, it has been stated that graft was rampant in the Haitian Government, and that the Government funds deposited in the bank were being embezzled by officials, and no attempt made to pay the national debts.

A revolution broke out in Port Au Prince in July, 1915. President Guillaume Sam took refuge in the French legation. He was taken out by a mob and killed. On the same day an American warship dropped anchor before the city. Admiral Caperton landed a contingent of Marines, and took over control of the city "to protect American lives and property," although it was not alleged that any American had been molested. The Haitian Legislature met to elect a new President, but Admiral Caperton, on orders from the State Department, ordered it to adjourn.

It is interesting to note that when these occurrences took place, the Secretary of State was William J. Bryan who, in 1900, had been a candidate for President on a platform of "anti-imperialism," and had stumped the country declaring against American interference in the affairs of small nations. Apparently his sentiments had undergone a change.

With Admiral Caperton and his Marines in control of the capital, one of their first actions was to take over the collection of the customs. The State Department now boldly outlined, through Caperton, what it would expect of the Haitians. First, it expected the election of a President who would consent to the collection of the customs by Americans; second, it expected the new Government to accept assistance and advice from the United States in the future conduct of its affairs. Finally, a candidate for President was found who would agree to these terms. With Marines guarding the doors to the chamber, the Legislature met and elected this candidate.

In the following September, the new ad-

Missouri's Five Confederate Leaders Whose Images Will Be Carved on Stone Mountain

War-Time Services of Gens. Price, Shelby, Cockrell and Marmaduke, and Gov. Jackson, Which Caused Them to Be Selected for Honors in Memorial Sculpture.

By Floyd C. Shoemaker, Secretary
The State Historical Society of Missouri.

IN Missouri's annals the term Civil War is apropos. Classed as a Southern State, Missouri contributed 109,000 men to the Northern armies. Remaining in the Union despite her 115,000 slaves, she sent 30,000 men into the Confederate ranks. These two antinomic offerings represent 60 per cent of the men of military age and place Missouri first among states in proportion to population.

Significant also are Missouri's casualties. In the Union army the State lost 14,000. The total of her Confederate deaths was proportionately greater. The First and Second Missouri Brigades entered the Confederate service with 5000 men. The number soon increased to 8000. Yet, on the day that Lee surrendered, there were only 800 survivors.

Missouri provided the battle soil. Eleven hundred and sixty-two battles, engagements and skirmishes were fought here, or 11 per cent of the total combats of the war. The record is equaled by only two other states. And Missouri also furnished military leaders.

Besides sharing with Illinois the honor of sending forth Grant, the State contributed to the Northern cause Generals Francis Preston Blair Jr., John S. Phelps, William S. Harney and Francis Sigel.

Her gifts to the Confederacy included Generals Sterling Price, Joseph O. Shelby, John S. Marmaduke, Francis Marion Cockrell, Monroe M. Parsons, M. Jeff Thompson, Martin E. Green, William Y. Slack, John B. Clark Jr., Henry Lilly and John S. Bowen.

The lists, while not inclusive, are representative. They reveal a longer roll of Confederate than of Union commanders.

Four Soldiers, One Civilian.

The Special Missouri Committee appointed to nominate the five distinguished Missouri leaders in the service of the Confederacy, whose figures will be carved on the Stone Mountain Confederate Memorial, near Atlanta, Ga., selected four soldiers and one civilian. The military leaders were Price, Shelby, Marmaduke and Cockrell. The civilian leader was Gov. Claiborne F. Jackson.

Standing easily first among those Missourians who served in the South is Maj-Gen. Sterling Price. His pre-eminence today rests on the same substrata as of yesterday — a lovable and commanding personality combined with integrity of character. No man stood higher in Missouri. He had sat in the Legislature and in Congress. He had risen to the rank of Brigadier-General in the Mexican War. And he had held the office of Governor.

Trusted by Both Sides.

When the State convention of '61 met, 75 of the 99 delegates voted for Price as President. He inspired confidence. In the '40s and '50s he had been trusted by Benton and anti-Benton factions; in '61 he was esteemed by Northern and Southern delegates. In his conditional Unionism he symbolized the convention and the State. The capture of Camp Jackson compelled decision, and Price accepted the command of the Missouri State Guard. The act did more to strengthen the Southern cause in Missouri than the proclamations of Jackson, the oratory of statesmen or the laws of the Legislature. It created an army, and its author continued to be the central Confederate military figure in Missouri until the close of the war.

Defeat and disillusion dogged this stalwart, magnetic leader throughout his four years of military service with the almost unique exception of August and September of 1861. These two months brought Fortune's smiles. They yielded Wilson's Creek and Lexington, and bore fruit in prestige, supplies and recruits. The former tobacco buyer of Fayette, hotel keeper of Salisbury, merchant of Keytesville, and Missouri farmer, Legislator Congressman, Mexican War General, and Governor of Missouri was acclaimed by all who loved the South.

Disaster at Pea Ridge.

The month following witnessed retreat and culminated in the decisive Confederate defeat at Pea Ridge, Arkansas. Here the Missouri State flag was last unfurled. Price was wounded while shouting his constant command "Forward, Missourians!" And when the battle ended and the order for retreat was given, "Old Pap," the idol of his boys, burst into tears. His record that day made him a Major-General in the Confederate army. He was transferred to the east side of the Mississippi and thousands of Missourians followed. His position was subordinate. Tradition says that he received slight courtesy from headquarters at Richmond. Rumors circulated that Price was plotting to supersede Davis, and Price protested in vain.

Finally he sought transfer to the Transmississippi department. President Davis at first refused to grant the request. Price said he would resign, return to Missouri, and win new victories for the South. Davis replied that the resignation would be accepted and that he would be surprised if Price won victories. "Then I'll surprise you, sir," answered the Missourian. But the next day he received news that Davis would permit him to return. Ill fortune followed him in Arkansas when he was forced to yield Little Rock and lost the battle of Helena.

The next year was '64. Missouri wits called it the year of five seasons—winter, spring, summer, fall and Price's raid. Entering the State with a force of 10,000 men, he hoped to re-establish the old State government, expected a series of victories, and felt assured of doubling his force with Missouri recruits. The result was casualties exceeding enlistments, decisive defeat at Westport, and a severe retreat with heavy losses. Following the final crash Price went to Cordova, Mexico, and joined the Missouri colony. He later returned to Missouri and died in St. Louis on September 29, 1867, at the age of 58 years.

As a military leader Major-General Sterling Price exerted greater influence on the fortunes of war than on the field of battle. His influence expressed itself in two significant channels. He brought thousands of Missourians into the Confederate army. He caused thousands of Union soldiers to be diverted to Missouri when they were badly needed in other states. He easily ranks first in service to the Confederacy among many eminent competitors.

Shelby's Brilliant Career.

But "the greatest Missouri soldier on the Confederate side" was the Waverly rope-maker of Lafayette County, Brigadier-General Joseph Orville Shelby. His military career in Missouri was longer, more fruitful and triumphant. His achievements were noteworthy in attack and retreat, on march and battlefield. His victories, captures and recruits were many. Untrained in war, he became the pre-eminent cavalry leader of the West.

Shelby's Iron Brigade is the distinguished Confederate military body of the Transmississippi de-

Blue Law Intolerance.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I HAVE read in the issue of the Sedalia Democrat, under date of Jan. 29, 1926, a piece written by one Noah Webster Cooper, chairman of the Sabbata Committee of the Tennessee Synod of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

He says that there are 2500 Sunday trains hurrying America towards hell, and places every one that buys a Sunday paper on an equal footing with robbers, bank-breakers, adulterers, drunkards and liars.

In the name of millions of Americans I wish to put in my protest. His utterances are a libel against the nation. Does he mean to say that he believes that every man, woman or child who reads a Sunday paper is helping to pave the road to hell? If he does he is of the same spirit as the men were several hundred years ago who were turning the crank of the rack till every bone in the human body was dislocated.

Those men that hung witches and branded men on the foreheads in Salem, Mass., did these horrible things in the name of God. Mr. Cooper wants the blue laws enforced under the same name. Now, I do not believe that there is any God that will be happy in proportion that his children are miserable. My religion is to make this world better, make it as much of a heaven as in our power lies. As long as we have to have jails and poorhouses, lunatic asylums and penitentiaries the world is not as good as it ought to be.

We need no religious laws. You cannot make anyone good by law, all you can do is to create a lot of hypocrites. I think prohibition has proven that. You have to raise humanity right by love and kindness, you never will do it with whip and spur. MATHIAS MITTL.

A Good Example.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

IN looking over your January 30th issue of the Post-Dispatch I noticed in the pictorial section an insert of Junior Holland of Ormond Beach, Fla. He had been unable to walk prior to the individual attention given his case by the personal physician of John D. Rockefeller.

This act of John D. Rockefeller shows the true spirit of philanthropy—how great this old U. S. A. would be if our lost of fortune-favored citizens with millions of dollars at their disposal would center their philanthropic ideas to the helping of the unfortunate persons to whom life is a burden, perhaps the prognosis would, in most cases, be as it was in this particular case.

I hope to see the time when these persons who are now spending thousands of dollars collecting antiques, relics and what not, following this and that hobby, would think how much finer the returns would be if they centered their time, money and efforts in helping our unfortunates.

Who knows, these same persons who are given this timely attention in their unfortunate physical and mental condition may later on become our leading citizens, for in these people there is instilled a deep-seated feeling of appreciation to the entire world, a debt of gratitude lasting throughout their entire life.

Cautious Kellogg.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

SECRETARY KELLOGG is perfectly right in excluding the Hungarian Countess. This impulsive young woman, were she admitted here, might not see the benefits of a high tariff and be so indiscreet as to say so. Or, again, she might not be able to see the wide line of demarcation between a youth who holds up an individual and an aluminum magnate who holds up a nation. Perhaps she would be blind to the blessings of the political spoils system that puts inefficiency and corruption in the seats of public responsibility. She might class as imperialistic the courtmartialing of an army officer for the crime if refusing to lick the boots of his "superior" officers. She would be sure to miss the perfect consistency of packing certain governmental commissions with men not in harmony with the laws it is their sworn duty to enforce. And suppose she should say that Russia had a perfect right to set up any form of government she chose without being punished for it? Suppose that she should find that some insurgent Senator was the intellectual superior of his majesty, the Secretary of State?

These are awful thoughts and may we be spared the dreadfulness of their happening. Our American institutions and traditions must be jealously guarded, lest some "proletarian" Countess discover our callousness in not hanging out the crepe. O. R.

THE RICH MAN'S TAX BILL.

The overwhelming majority cast for the amended tax bill in the Senate after the flurry of one day shows that plutocracy is quite safe in the Senate. While the taxes on admissions and dues, on trucks and automobiles were repealed, the repealed inheritance tax and the enormous cuts on high surtaxes stood.

The argument that all taxpayers were relieved to some extent is true. But the test of the fairness of the division of tax cuts among various classes of taxpayers is the proportion in the cuts. The unfairness of the division was pointed out by Senator Reed, of Missouri. He showed that there was a total reduction of $270,000,000 in the taxes of citizens with millionaire incomes, for the benefit of only 5694 persons while the reduction amounted to only $201,500,000 on the remaining 4,085,000 taxpayers. The millionaire taxpayers enjoy an average reduction of $48,000 each, while the other taxpayers get a reduction of only $49 each.

That the Senate has greatly favored the rich is shown not only in the big cut of high surtaxes but in the repeal of the inheritance tax, and in the relief it gives from practically any taxation to a large number of rich oil corporations.

The worst action of the Senate, absolutely contradictory to the rule of favoring earned incomes, is the repeal of the inheritance tax. None of the wealth exempted from taxation by this act is earned by the recipients. It is accumulated wealth, which would under the Senate bill pass to the beneficiaries, without a cent of taxation from the Federal Government. The whole burden is put upon those who earn their incomes by labor and ability, or who enjoy accumulations. The Senate has exempted all those who come into great wealth, no matter how great, without effort.

The inheritance tax, within reason, is the fairest tax that can be laid. It is laid upon unearned wealth. It is the only tax that has even the color of public benefit. It tends progressively to reduce vast accumulations of wealth, and to take a part of these accumulations for the operation of government and the benefit of all the people, who more or less have contributed to them.

The bill now goes to conference, and we shall see whether the House is as tender of wealth, particularly of inherited wealth, as the Senate. There will be strong pressure to adjust the reductions of taxation and thus reduce the total reduction, which Mr. Mellon declares is too great. The reductions will have to be adjusted to the needs of the Government, and we shall see whether the House will join with the Senate in handing huge gifts, out of all proportion to the relief afforded others, to those who enjoy the greater benefits of Government and are best able to bear its burdens.

HOSPITALS FOR COUNTRY DISTRICTS.

It is a well-known fact that most country districts lack hospital facilities, and that it is the custom, in urgent major operations, to rush the patient to the nearest city, the delay being a serious handicap to recovery.

The Commonwealth Fund of New York City, established in 1918 by Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness and chartered to carry on work "for the benefit of mankind," with a total endowment of $38,000,000, announces a program for the construction of hospitals in rural communities. The fund will, in the case of approved applications, contribute two-thirds of the cost of construction and equipment of the hospital, while the local community must contribute one-third and must also meet operating and maintenance costs.

Here is an opportunity for Missouri country districts and the Southwest generally to bestir themselves and acquire needed hospitals, so that local patients may receive prompt and efficient treatment, and thus relieve the city hospitals of many patients who now crowd these institutions.

WHO HE IS.

In view of Senator David A. Reed's prominence in recent Senate debates on matters which affect Mellon programs and Mellon interests it might be well to identify him. Reed's law firm in Pittsburg represents the Mellons in litigation. Reed in the Senate represents the Mellon point of view in legislation. It's a nifty arrangement.

Congressman Rainey of Illinois has severely scored Italy's debt terms, but the chap who is doing more than anyone else to prevent ratification is Benito Mussolini.

AS TO SUDAN COTTON PRODUCTION.

A cotton expert takes exception to a recent editorial in the Post-Dispatch on cotton production in the Sudan, in which it was stated that "if successful, Great Britain will no longer be dependent on the United States for cotton." This, of course, is of great interest to American cotton growers.

The statement was based on the news that some 300,000 acres of land in the Sudan will be irrigated by the water from the Sennar Dam, the sluices of which were opened a few days ago.

Of the world's total cotton crop, amounting in 1924 to 24,700,000 bales, the United States produced 13,619,000 bales. According to the 1924 Year Book of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Great Britain, the heaviest cotton importer, imported an average of 4,164,000 bales during the years 1909 to 1913. Assuming that Great Britain took the entire cotton produce of Egypt, including French Sudan, averaging 1,453,000 bales, she would still need some 3,000,000 bales annually to supply her spindles.

The average cotton production per acre in Northern Africa being .8394 of a bale, it is evident that when the entire 300,000 acres of land proposed to be irrigated in the Sudan are producing, the total will be something less than 300,000 bales. This will evidently leave a quite considerable market for American cotton in Great Britain.

But the apparent menace to American cotton growers is the further fact that the Sudan has an estimated area of 2,000,000 square miles, with a climate suitable for cotton growing. The further irrigation of much of this vast area will, of course, extend the cotton-growing districts. But how much can be irrigated is doubtful, and without irrigation not much can be expected in the way of profitable cotton crops.

Just at present there appears to be no serious menace to American cotton in this outlook. But it will be wise for American cotton men to extend their markets to meet their needs.

So Vermont has more cows than people. Well, they fence in the poor cows.

SOUTH TYROL UNDER MUSSOLINI.

Mussolini's tirade against Germany, which has shocked all thoughtful citizens everywhere, disturbed heads of Governments, promoted bitter political gossip and set Europe on edge, was offered as a reply to a discussion by Dr. Held, the Bavarian Premier, of the plight of German nationals in the South Tyrol.

The South Tyrol was allotted to Italy in the treaty of St. Germain. In the realignment under that treaty the smaller Powers, like Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Serbia, were legally obligated to respect the language, religion and culture of national minorities. As a great Power Italy was not thus legally obligated, but her moral obligation was most binding because of the "liberal traditions which are at once her fame and prestige." This was the position taken by Senator Tittoni, Italian delegate to the peace conference, in a speech in Parliament. It was subsequently affirmed by Premier Giolitti, and this policy was faithfully adhered to until Fascismo appeared.

It was in April, 1921, that the South Tyrol had its first experience with Fascismo when a costume procession in Bozen was attacked. There were a number of casualties and a teacher was shot dead while trying to protect a child. Intermittent outrages followed, among them the daubing of the statue of the national minnesinger, Walter von der Vogelweide, with Italy's national colors. A period of comparative calm was rudely broken in October, 1922, by the placarding of the principal school at Bozen with Fascist proclamations. German teachers and pupils were driven out and an Italian school established.

Fascismo, however, had not yet arrived. It did not come into power until 1923. Immediately the Mussolini Government disavowed all pretenses to liberalism and frankly instituted a tyranny which in its cumulative effect has been a reign of terror. It briskly launched a campaign of Italianization. It fused South Tyrol with the Trentino into the single province of Trento, repealed the Austrian land and parish laws and, by substituting Italian laws, deprived 230,000 Germans of every possibility of national self-determination. The Fascist policy, as promulgated by Senator Tolomei, required all laws and decrees to be published exclusively in Italian. The confusion which followed, due to the fact that many of the people did not know Italian, offered opportunities for oppression, of which the Mussolini Government eagerly availed itself. In parishes where Italian had never been spoken, German was forbidden, Italian was made the official language and practically the only legal language. Finally German was banned in the elementary schools, though that decree has since been slightly modified. A Catholic periodical for children, The Little Postillion, was suppressed. Terms of ancient origin, carrying the accollade of folklore—such as "Sudtirol," "Deutschetirol" and "Tyroler"—were proscribed.

Sensibilities, institutions, customs, the warp and woof of a people's heritage, along with legal rights and privileges, have been ruthlessly crushed. The record is scarred with material wrongs, with deportations and ugly violence. It is a record of moral and physical brutality. Its objective is the denationalization of the German Tyrolese. Against such injustice and inhumanity Dr. Held protests.

The statement of the case is admittedly ex parte. It is the German version of events. Unless wildly exaggerated it is a moving recital of a people's woes and a terrible indictment of the Italian dictatorship.

Mussolini's answer corroborates rather than refutes the Bavarian Premier's accusation. Sneers, expletives and an insolent threat about frontiers that is either the splenetic rage of a furioso or a declaration of war—such an exhibition is the answer of guilt.

SABBATARIAN LAWS UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

The Tennessee Sunday blue law, passed 123 years ago, is being tested by the citation of various persons engaged in industries that run seven days in the week. New Jersey has tried a similar experiment, sweeping into the Sabbatarian dragnet hundreds of citizens, with indifferent success. In Tennessee even radio broadcasting, which the framers of the law would probably have condemned as witchcraft, is to be barred, if the test upholds the law.

But it is to be noted that the law enforcers state that radio stations which broadcast sermons will not be molested.

There are objections to this exception that will occur to everyone. The broadcasting of sermons is as much "labor" as any other broadcasting. And it can be done on the six secular days of the week. The exemption is class legislation. If all unnecessary labor is to be prohibited on Sundays, why except preaching, unless those who preach admit that it is either not labor, or is necessary labor?

But, if necessary, and if the people must single out the preacher or religious teacher as one favored under the law, what about the first amendment to the Constitution, which forbids any law "respecting an establishment of religion?"

Sabbatarian laws do, in fact, tend to the establishment of a religion. The Sabbatarians, of course, argue that "this is a Christian country." Why, then, did the framers of the Constitution draw up the first amendment prohibiting the establishment of any religion, Christian or other, by legislation? And why did the Legislatures of three-fourths of the states ratify that amendment?

The Constitution sustains the freedom of religion and forbids any discrimination as to religions. All are free and none can be favored. That is the only sound basis of freedom.

PANETELA.

YES, Luella,
Now the battle
Over taxes
Has been fought,
Let us take
Account of damage
That has possibly
Been wrought.
Seeking to Discover whether,
After all
Is said and done,
Anything
For humble people
In this matter
Has been won.

Take publicity,
For instance.
Now a dictum
Of the past:
Who believed
That such a triumph
For equality
Could last?
Who believed
That predatory
Wealth for long
Would have displayed
As a fact
That doesn't matter
Very greatly
What it made?

After all,
My little girlie,
These things
Do count;
Wherefore what
Was the law
Relating to it
Is unfortunately Not.
Human greed
Is too puissant,
Once its battle
Line-up sets,
To permit
A looking into
What it actually Gets.

So in that respect,
My dearie,
We have lost,
If truth be told,
What we never
Had the slightest Chance for very Long to hold.
Which is quite
As true,
Luella,
Of inheritance
As that
Which the state
May share with fortune,
Also dead
By this fiat.

Where the trouble
Lies in such things
Is that having Made our stand
With that crowd,
We have acclaimed them
As the rulers
Of the land.
Wherefore,
They not being
Such as Morals merely Ever daunt,
They have seized
With our permission
Just exactly
What they want.

Apropos the Mexican orchestra which is to play in St. Louis: When the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce ran an excursion into Mexico some years ago the travelers were met by brass bands at all the principal cities. At San Luis Potosi the set-up was particularly ornate, the band being unusually large and highly uniformed. One of the pieces it played in compliment to the visitors was "My Old Kentucky Home." Observing an old man, evidently an American, weeping, one of the St. Louisans stepped over to him and asked sympathetically:

"Are you a Kentuckian?"

"No," answered the oldster. "I'm a musician."

A VALENTINE.

In cold or warmth, in rain or shine,
You are my love, my Valentine:
When winter's days are cold and drear,
I do not mind if you are near:
If summer's heat shall blight and burn,
For your caressing hand I yearn:
When illness comes, and pain holds sway,
Your love can smooth it all away:
When days are bright, and Fortune smiles,
We laugh together at her wiles:
When Gloom spreads wings of inky hue,
I do not fear, I still have you.
Now how, and why, should all this be,
Well—I love you, and you love me!

A. E. WAGNER.

I am for freedom of religion against all maneuvers to bring about a legal ascendency of one sect over another; for freedom of the press, and against all violations of the Constitution to silence by force and not by reason the complaints or criticisms, just or unjust, of our citizens against the conduct of their agents.

And I am for encouraging the progress of science in all its branches; and not for raising a hue and cry against the sacred name of philosophy; for awing the human mind by stories of rawhead and bloody bones to a distrust of its own vision to to repose implicitly on that of others; to go backward instead of forward to look for improvement; to believe that government, religion, morality and every other science were in the highest perfection in ages of darkest ignorance; and that nothing can ever be devised more perfect than was established by our forefathers. . . .—Thomas Jefferson.

The MIRROR OF PUBLIC OPINION

This column is designed to reproduce without bias the latest comment by our leading publicists, newspapers and periodicals on the questions of the day.

CHRIST AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

From the Fargo Forum.

ONE of the curious practices of the day is to speculate on what Christ would do if He should return today and take up His abode in the United States. At frequent intervals, sermons are delivered on the subject, and many activities are outlined for His daily comings and goings. The latest to undertake this far-seeing task is Rev. Dr. Carlton D. Harris of Baltimore, who wanted to know what Christ's attitude would be toward business, newspapers and movies. After looking into the matter, Dr. Harris decided that the newspapers would be rejected as the chief agency for the propagation of truth. The movies would be refused too, but, as Kipling used to say, that is another story. One is not so sure that Jesus would turn against the newspapers. A reading of the New Testament reveals much of the journalist in Christ and a few of His disciples. As a matter of fact, He was followed everywhere by four of the greatest reporters the world has known—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. They were the first of those ubiquitous fellows who, through the changing ages, have chronicled the day's events for an anxious and avid public, and the fact that their stories are read and preached from twenty centuries after their writing is proof of their greatness. No President of the United States traveling hither and yonder on a great mission, accompanied by two score correspondents, ever had his movement or his addresses chronicled in such a lasting way. No reporter of any paper the world has known has ever written with such artistry or recorded such events. Read the accounts of the triumphal entry, the miracles, the Sermon on the Mount and the tragedy of the Cross for proof. Christ abjure newspapers today? Not at all. The first thing He would do would be search for four reporters the equal of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, and together they would get out a daily paper that would make the Pulitzers, Danas and Wattersons rise from the grave. And He would put these reporters to work writing scenarios for the movies, too, as they would give us some mighty dramas.

FRANCE'S OPTIMISM.

From the Times of Zurich, Switzerland.

FRANCE'S political life suffers less from the abuses of parliamentarianism. This element has become so strong of late that it has established its supremacy over governmental authority in a threatening way. Never before have the party caucuses, the national committees and the different political clubs played such a role in the country as in the year 1925. It was according to the decision of these bodies, often without even asking the advice of the totality of the national representatives, that Cabinet Ministers had to drop their portfolios, that Cabinets had to be formed, that Presidents and Premiers shaken from their positions. With all its troubles, however, France has not lost its optimism, nor has her republican ideals and aspirations been. The fact that France does not fall either a fascist or a communist outbreak is due to the character of the French people, who know that its problems are more financial and therefore subject to solution with the regular means.

An Estimate of Cockrell.

Major-General John S. Marmaduke was a cavalry leader of marked ability. He had almost every requisite for success. He was cautious and courageous, gentlemanly and firm. He was intellectual and logical. He had the confidence and the respect of his men. The fact that he could always extricate them from difficulty, and never failed. He tempered recklessness in advance and he was unsurpassed in retreat. He was regarded with jealousy by leaders vastly his inferior in ability. He was credited by many with greater than were ever at his disposal. Standing alone in his intellectual accomplishments, he enjoyed much, rose high, and left

Missourians to Be Represented on Stone Mountain

partment. Its activity is greatest, its feats undivaled, and its fighting spirit matchless. Missouri and Arkansas were its main field of operation. Here it engaged in scores of combats. No major battle was fought without it taking prominent, and at times decisive, part. In attack, it was the vanguard, in retreat the rearguard. In the battle of Westport it was the central organization of the day, and after Price's defeat twice saved his army from annihilation. It fought here in '64 as it had fought in the Boston Mountains in '62 when the Federal commander, Gen. Hunt, asked during the truce, "Whose troops fought me today?" "Shelby's brigade, sir." "How did they behave?" replied Marmaduke. "Behave! Why, sir, they fought like devils." And so had Shelby fought at Wilson's Creek, Pea Ridge, Newtonia and Helena.

In raiding and recruiting it equaled its courage and temerity in battle. Each year of the war it dashed from one to three times into the state. A Missouri raid in '63 with 800 men brought these results: 1500 miles in 40 days, 20 towns taken, 11 forts and blockhouses burned, 27 combats fought, 2000 Federal casualties, destruction of railroad and telegraph property, and 1000 men recruited.

Brigade Flag Buried.

Men with these records seldom surrender. When further fighting was useless, the brigade with its leader marched to the Rio Grande. Here it buried its flag in the waters of the river and crossed to Mexican soil. Two years later Shelby returned to Missouri, where, in Cedar County, he became a farmer. In 1893 he was appointed U. S. Marshall for the Western District of Missouri. He died in 1898.

Joseph O. Shelby, Francis Preston Blair Jr. and B. Gratz Brown were cousins, born on Kentucky soil. The first followed the South, the latter two the North. Blair became one of the two greatest volunteer Generals in the Union army and later entered the U. S. Senate. Brown also entered that body and later became Governor of Missouri. Shelby's record, made at the youthful age of only 30 years, was written in the deeds of his Iron Brigade.

The best trained, pro-Southern military man in Missouri at the beginning of the war was John S. Marmaduke of Saline County. His father, M. M. Marmaduke, had served as Missouri's eighth Governor; his uncle, Claiborne F. Jackson, occupied the gubernatorial chair in '61; and the son and nephew later sat as Missouri's twenty-fifth chief executive. His education and training equaled his family and position. He was a graduate of Yale and received his first military commission in the U. S. army on graduating at West Point. Under Albert Sidney Johnston he saw active service in Utah and on the outbreak of the war was on duty in New Mexico. His sympathies were with the South and he hurried home to consult his father.

The former Governor had served with the older generation of Benton and Jackson, and made allegiance to the Union a cardinal principle of his life. A member of the family has related that he said: "John, there can be but one choice. You will sacrifice your profession. Secession will fail. Slavery will be abolished. But you must decide for yourself, following your own convictions."

Father and Son Part.

Young Marmaduke, like many of the young men who belonged to the old Benton democratic families, decided to cast his fortunes with the South. Tradition says that the father then settled the matter in these words: "John, go upstairs and change your uniform."

The ability of the young officer was early recognized, despite his pronounced modesty and meager years. He was elected Colonel of the first regiment formed in Jefferson City. At Boonville, where the first Missouri battle, against his advice, was fought, he was in command. Disagreeing with the military policy of his uncle, Gov. Jackson, he resigned from the Missouri State Guard, went to Richmond and received a Confederate commission. After serving in Arkansas, he was transferred east of the Mississippi and placed under his old leader, Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston. He served at Bowling Green, Fort Donelson and Corinth. The rank of Brigadier-General was won at Shiloh, where he was wounded. Back again in Arkansas he made an enviable record. His opposition to Gen. Steel made possibly Kirby Smith's decisive victory at Jenkins's Ferry. It brought Marmaduke the commission of a Major-General. His cavalry division was everywhere, and included the indomitable Shelby. Under Price he entered Missouri in '64, and after the defeat at Westport was captured near Fort Scott, Kan. He died in 1887.

An Estimate of Cockrell.

Major-General John S. Marmaduke was a cavalry leader of marked ability. He had almost every requisite for success. He was ambitious and courageous, gentle and firm. He was intellectual and liberal. He had the confidence and the respect of his men. They knew that he could always extricate them from difficulty, and he never failed. He tempered reckless in advance and he was unsurpassed in retreat. He was regarded with jealousy by leaders actually his inferior in ability. He was credited by many with means greater than were ever at his disposal. Standing alone in his isolation but magnificent physical and intellectual accomplishments, he enjoyed much, rose high, and left an untarnished record of excellence in peace and war.

Few men, if any, in Missouri history made more of opportunity, worked harder to develop character, and were more widely acclaimed throughout a life span by adherent and opponent than the Warrensburg lawyer, Francis Marion Cockrell. The caresses of fortune competed with the fruits of labor to make this man a success. Not one unhappy step marks his career. In popular affection he almost equals Price as a General, in bravery and courage he stands with Shelby as a leader, and in discipline and efficiency he rivals Marmaduke as a commander. Yet when the war opened he was only 26 years old, had never been in public life, and was without military training. He rose to the rank of Brigadier-General in the Confederate Army, became the hero of battles, and left a military tradition of sanctity which is similar to that of Stonewall Jackson. Later, after a decade passed he was elected to his first public office, the highest in the gift of a State, which he ocntinuously held for 30 years—the only rival of Benton's record in the United States Senate.

Like most Missouri military men he saw service in this State and Arkansas during the first year of the war and took part in all important combats from Carthage to Pea Ridge. The next three years were spent east of the Mississippi as leader of the flower of Price's old army. His command was known as Cockrell's Fight Brigade of Missourians, officially as the First Missouri Brigade. Its reputation was widespread and some regarded it as the "best disciplined, best fighting and most efficient brigade in the Confederate army."

It saw service at Iuka, Corinth, Hatchie, Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Vicksburg, Champion's Hill, Big Black, Kenesaw Mountain, Tilton and Franklin. At Franklin, Tennessee, it last 68 per cent of its strength in two hours fighting, gained and held its objective, and emerged as the central division of the battle. During lulls between almost incessant fighting the brigade was drilled by its commander.

Cockrell believed in training and praying, and the story runs that he "led his men to battle with Hardee's Tactics in one pocket and the little Bible his mother gave him in the other."

An Impressive Farewell.

When the remnants of his once powerful force surrendered at Mobile in 1865 he briefly bade them farewell: "This brigade has a record to be proud of, and I can truthfully say that perhaps no other brigade commander in the army can say, that they never made a charge and failed to sustain it, and never were assailed and failed to repulse it." Years later he would seldom talk about the war and did much to allay its resulting prejudices.

Once, when being pressed to recount the struggle of the '60s, he said: "Men who continue to talk of nothing but war 20 years after it is over usually have done nothing worth while to talk about since its close."

Among Missouri civilian leaders who contributed much to the Confederacy, the most distinguished is Gov. Clairborne F. Jackson. His service as chief executive was short, beginning in January and ending in July, 1861, when he was replaced through action of the State convention by Gov. Gamble. Even his service as the Confederate civilian head of Missouri lasted only two years, his death being in December, 1862. Yet, during these seven months and the two years, he accomplished much for his cause. His strong pro-Southern stand as Governor, his sympathetic relations with a pro-Southern Legislature and his position as Commander in Chief of the Missouri State Guard, were of deep significance. He aroused and focused public opinion similarly tending through messages and proclamations. He obtained pro-Southern legislation for raising and equipping armies. He placed the direction of Missouri troops under pro-Southern Generals. And finally, though after his authority was no longer recognized and enforceable over the State, he secured the passage of an ordinance of secession which sent Representatives and Senators to sit in the Confederate Congress.

Gov. Jackson's Difficulties.

Gov. Jackson had enjoyed a superior training in public life lasting nearly two decades before his election as Governor. He had helped frame the 1845 Constitution, for 12 years had sat in the Legislature, was the reputed author and one of the strongest real supporters of the "Jackson Resolutions," was one of the framers of the State banking system of 1857, and had served as State Bank Commissioner. Moreover, he was a member and one of the strongest leaders of the Central group of Democratic politicians. From his Fayette home he helped direct the policies of the party which brought about the defeat of Benton.

In his inaugural message as Governor he revealed his strong pro-Southern position, and from that day to his death he maintained that position. He made mistakes in judgment and his weakness was indecision and procrastination in time of crisis, yet it may be recalled that he was opposed by a remarkable politician and statesman, an able, fearless and almost fanatical commander, and 10,000 well-armed, thoroughly trained soldiers; that Missouri was surrounded on three sides by free soil; and that no man knew what Missourians thought or would do in the final test. It is questionable if any other civilian leader would have accomplished more.

Herriot's Book Basis of Comedy.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Feb. 13.—Little did Edouard Herriot, former Premier and now President of the Chamber of Deputies, think when he wrote his big book on Madame Recamier as a university thesis that it would form the basis for "a lyric comedy in one act." That is what happened to M. Herriot's biography, and the work is soon to be produced at the Casino at Nice. The music is by M. Charles Pons, who wrote the score to Georges Clemenceau's "The Veil of Happiness." "The Tiger's" opera is every now and then agai nplayed at the Opera Comique and film has been made of it.

BOSTWICK TO LECTURE BEFORE WOMEN VOTERS

Public Librarian to Speak on "China and the West" at Hotel Chase Tuesday.

The Primary School of Foreign Affairs of the St. Louis League of Women Voters will discuss China at their next meeting, at 3:45 p. m. Tuesday, at Hotel Chase.

Dr. Arthur E. Bostwick, public librarian, will speak on "China and the West," after which there will be general discussion.

The league's activity for the week will be centered on the Woman's National Exposition at the Coliseum, where a booth has been arranged with the "Australian Mechanical Voting Machine" as chief exhibit. Members will explain the mechanism and distribute literature on the work of the league.

The Committee on Women in Industry has organized an economics class for working girls, to be held at the Public Library every Friday evening, beginning this week. Mrs. Richard Cadbury is in charge of the activity.

Child labor laws will be discussed by a group of Twenty-fourth Ward members at the home of Mrs. A. E. Leonhardt, 1227 McCausland avenue, Thursday afternoon. Mrs. R. Walston Chubb will speak on "Needed Improvements in Child Labor Laws."

The Political Information Bureau has postponed this week's meeting until Feb. 26, when a moving picture, "The Woman Worker, Past and Present," produced by the United States Department of Labor, will be shown.

Liberalism in the Dumps, Lloyd George Declares causes, the Democratic overthrow at the last presidential election in America. They were the middle party between the conservatism, represented by President Coolidge, and the upsetism, championed by Mr. La Follette. They were buffetted on both sides and crumbled away under all-round blows hammered at them. That was the fate of Liberalism in England in 1924.

Can it ever recover from that defeat? That is the question which is agitating many minds inside and outside of that party. At the last election the Conservatives captured 1,000,000 Liberal votes and the Labor party perhaps another 500,000. This was partly due to the fact that the Liberals fought 102 fewer seats than they contested at the previous election. The Liberal vote in these constituencies was divided between the two other parties. Those parties are now anxious to know whether, at the next election, they will retain their "ill-gotten gains" of 1924 and what prospect there is of their capturing the remaining 3,000,000 that voted Liberal last time.

In Camp for Good.

Both parties are angling for this big fish. The Conservatives introduce Liberal measures at home and a Liberal spirit into their foreign policy abroad. They do as little damage to free trade as is compatible with their retaining the support of the protectionist wing. The Socialists quarrel ostentatiously in public with the Communists—bury the capital levy and cover up their scarlet ideas in sober and even drab garments. Then their leaders coo in gentle tones to the Liberal auditors: "Why don't you come and join us? We are the real successors of Gladstone and the Liberal fathers."

All this reveals foreknowledge on the part of the political agents that British Liberals will decide the issue for the next Parliament, either at the polls or after the polls. The last four elections demonstrate that there are in this country 4,000,000 voters who can be depended upon, in the absence of a panic, to vote Liberal, and that there are 3,000,000 who will vote Liberal in all weathers. The course of the elections also shows that there are between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 who belong to no political party and are apt to vote as the spirit moves them.

These facts disclose the possibilities for Liberalism from the base right up to the peak. The bye-elections since 1924 so far prove a slump in Torvism, a slight depression in Socialism and a perceptible increase in the Liberal vote. But these are early days to prophecy. The Government has three and a half years yet to run, and the chances are that, profiting by their experience in 1923, they will go to the end of their term.

So far, according to a speech delivered by their latest recruit, Sir Alfred Mond, in October last, they have been "the greatest failure and disappointment in history." That is putting it rather high, but it does represent a genuine feeling that they have muddled one or two important affairs badly. Still, things may come their way in the next three years.

Future Is Uncertain.

I remember a prominent American Democrat boasting, two or three years ago, that his party had their opponents "cold." So they had at that time. Things were going badly for the Republican party—trade, employment, political troubles. Another year say great changes in the fortunes of the American parties. The cold spell passed and the presidential election took place when the Republican party was passing through its torrid zone. I will not, therefore, perpetrate the folly of engaging in any forecast of the election of 1929. But this much I can say, that if the liberal dissensions at the top continue for another three years, the party below will be so disheartened that they will cease to shovel much coal under the boilers and the ship will slow down, even if it does not drift and become derelict.

In number, the wranglers are not numerous but they stand near the broadcasting disc and discord is heard far and wide. This creates a distaste for Liberal music and drives even those who have an affection for it to switch on to other political wave lengths. On the other hand, if the Liberals compose their feuds—and do it in all sincerity, or if the brawlers are thrown into the street and if Liberalism is recognized by men who understand the difference between organization and caballing, and has a program of national reconstruction which suits the needs of a nation hard pressed by its war burdens, then the Liberal party may soon surprise not only its critics but its friends by its recovery of vitality, energy and power.

The fortunes of the parties will depend largely on one or two things as to which no one can feel confident. Will trade improve to such an extent as to wipe out unemployment and bring prosperity to the nation? Will capital and labor compose their differences and avoid strife in the industrial field? Will the moderates succeed in keeping their extremists in the Socialist party under the hatches? Will the Liberals at the center cease making faces at each other amid the derision of an onlooking nation? Anyone who has the right answer to these questions has the key to the result of the next election and especially to the future of Liberalism in England.

ministration of Haiti signed a treaty with the United States which provided that a receiver-general of customs, a financial adviser, and a director of public works and sanitation should be nominated by the President of the United States, and ratified by the President of Haiti. It provided for the establishment of a national police, or gendarmerie, to be organized, drilled and commanded by American army officers, who would be nominated by the President of the United States, but commissioned by the President of Haiti. The treaty provisions were to remain in force until 1926.

In its report in 1921, the Senate Committee expressed the opinion that "the American representatives had influenced the majority of the Assembly in the choice of a President, and had exercised pressure to induce the ratification by Haiti of the treaty," although the report, on the whole, justified the occupation.

American Wrote Constitution.

A new Constitution was adopted. Franklin Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, later admitted that he drafted this Constitution in the Navy Department at Washington. The Haitians confirm this by saying that it was presented to them with the discreet suggestion that it would better be adopted.

The law provides that the Assembly, which corresponds to the Congress of the United States, shall be elected every two years. Since the occupation of Haiti in 1915 there has never been an election. Haiti has had no lawmaking body in session for 10 years. All laws are promulgated by the President with the advice and consent of the American officials.

Inquiry made at the Haitian legation here a few days ago as to when elections would be held in Haiti, elicited the astonishingly frank response that President Borno, who is friendly to the occupation, had no intention of permitting an election soon, because it undoubtedly would be won by the "independence" party. Under the present regime, the President is elected by the members of a Council, or Cabinet, whom he appoints to office. Under that system he can be fairly sure of re-election.

The treaty of 1915 was subsequently extended to cover the period up to 1936. The offices of receiver of customs and financial adviser have since been consolidated, and the position is held by W. W. Cumberland, former foreign trade adviser to the State Department. The director of sanitation and public works is Commander C. S. Butler, of the Navy Medical Corps.

The financial advisor recommended in 1922 that Haiti obtain a loan. Accordingly, despite the fact that the Haitian Government was the borrower, the bids actually were advertised by the State Department. In fact, bidders were instructed to submit their bids to the State Department. The loan was $16,000,000, and the successful bidder was the National City Bank. As long as the Marines are on the job and an American officer is collecting the customs it is entirely likely that the interest and principal will be paid on the nail.

"Aside from the National City Bank," said Father McGowan, "the largest American interests in Haiti are the Haitian-American Sugar Co., the Haitian-American Pineapple Co. and the United West Indies Trading Co. It is obviously the purpose of these corporations to acquire as much land as they can. Since the occupation they have acquired about 200,000 acres.

"The transformation of a land of small farms into a system of co-operation-owned plantations is precisely what had already occurred under American rule in Porto Rico and Santo Domingo. In Porto Rico, where the plantation system has reached an advanced stage of development, I saw poverty without a parallel in the civilized world. The slums of New York and Glasgow are opulent by comparison.

"It is a comparatively simple matter for the big corporation, with unlimited funds, a legal staff, and a friendly understanding with the American advisers, to absorb the little farms. Sometimes it is done through the flash of ready money, and sometimes through foreclosure.

"The American corporations work together. If the National Bank of Haiti, which means the National City Bank of New York, has a mortgage on a Haitian farm, it does not hesitate to foreclose. The result is that one of the big corporations buys the farm in at public sale.

Easy to Snatch Land.

"The Americans have instituted a wholesale resurveying of land titles. In this primitive country, many titles are of the squatter variety. The little Haitian farmer, illiterate and ignorant of law, knows only that his father occupied the farm and that he succeeded to it. The resurvey has opened countless opportunities for the big plantation companies, with their title experts and lawyers, to evict the native farmers and take possession. The cards are all stacked against the poor native.

"It is now proposed by the American officials to irrigate a large arid valley near Port au Prince. This in itself is highly desirable, but observe how the plan works. When the land becomes cultivateable, it will be distributed on this basis: that for every acre cultivated by a person or corporation, two more acres will be given to that person or corporation. The plantation companies, with the tractors and laborers which they can mobilize, will be able to hog the lion's share.

"The American officials are now recommending laws by which the banks will be able to foreclose without the consent of native Judges. Generally speaking, these Judges have been hostile to foreclosures. Hence their pay has been kept down, sometimes to as low as $10 a month, by the Americans holding the purse strings. With interest rates at 15 to 18 per cent, the banks working with the plantation companies, and the farmers denied the protection of the native courts, the business of expropriating the native farmers will proceed much more rapidly and easily."

One of the practices under the occupation which has been widely condemned, was the restoration of the corvee. The corvee, an antiquated nad barbarous custom which had been in disuse for many years, consisted of seizing men and forcing them to work on the roads. The Americans revived it. The result is described by Nearing and Freeman as follows:

Form of Slavery.

"The occupation seized men wherever it could find them, and no able-bodied Haitian was safe from these raids, which most closely resembled the slave raids of past centuries. By day or by night, from the bosoms of their families, from their little farms, or while trudging peaceably along the country roads, Haitians were seized and taken to toil for months in remote sections of the country. Those who resisted were beaten into submission. Those who attempted to escape were shot."

One of those thus seized was Charlemagne Peralte, a man of education and influence, and a leader in the "independence" movement. Forced to labor on the streets of Cape Haytien, he escaped, fled to the back country, and organized a revolutionary band. A Marine Lieutenant, Herman H. Hanneken of St. Louis, and a Marine Sergeant, blacked their faces, penetrated one night into Peralte's camp and shot him as he stood before his campfire.

This incident furnishes an excellent example of the hopelessly opposed views of those who condemn the occupation and those who defend it. Freeman and Nearing describe the killing of Peralte as one of the most cold-blooded assassinations ever conceived. Major-General John A. Lejeune, commanding officer of the Marine Corps, told the writer that he regarded it as a feat of extraordinary heroism performed in the line of duty. It's all in the viewpoint.

However, little has been said in defense of the corvee. The Senate committee, in acquitting the occupation generally of wrongdoing, condemned the revival of the corvee, and particularly as it involved the removal of men from their homes to remote sections of the country. It found that the corvee had greatly stimulated Haitian resistance to the occupation. It has since been abandoned.

Gen. Lejeune, to whose attention the criticisms of Nearing, Freeman and Father McGowan were called, pointed out in the first place that the policy of occupying Haiti was decided in 1915, and by the State Department, and that the Marines merely carried out their orders. The occupation is maintained under the terms of the treaty, and whether or not the treaty was forced upon Haiti was not his business to say. He was strongly of the opinion, however, that the occupation had been of great benefit to Haiti.

The Brighter Side.

"When we went in," he said, "the country was in constant terror of revolution. The farmers were plundered by bandits. The roads were in bad repair. The people were eaten up with taxes, and the money was grafted by dishonest officials. Illiteracy and insanitary conditions were the rule. country's finances, established schools, improved sanitation, built roads, and we have restored order." Replying to a question as to the loss of life involved on the Haitian side in restoring order, he said:

"There have been some people killed, naturally. It was necessary to break up these bands, and unfortunately, they usually took refuge in the midst of their women and children, so some noncombatants were killed accidentally. Don't forget that some of our own men were killed, too. It wasn't nice duty—climbing through those mountains and being sniped and ambushed by native bands. The Marines made a fine record. There were a few instances of unnecessary cruelty (the Senate Committee found that some prisoners had been executed without trial), but they were individual cases, and the men responsible for them were severely punished.

"Everything that we have done there has been done for the good of the Haitians, and the more intelligent of them realize it. We will leave Haiti a different country from the Haiti we found, and it will be a better country in every sense."

"But," he was reminded, "there have been some men—including those who founded the United States—who believed that only those who are governed have the right to say how they shall be governed; that whether their government is good or bad is not for outsiders to determine — or change."

"That's a matter of policy," smiled the General, "and I'm a soldier. The State Department determines the policy, I obey orders."

Earlier the writer had asked Father McGowan as to the present political condition in Haiti.

"It is very quiet," he said. "The Haitians have learned that they cannot do much against the machine guns of the Marines. They are dejected and helpless."

GAG ON COMMUNIST STUDENTS PROTESTED BY OXFORD UNION

Restriction on Political Views by University Vice Chancellor Subject of Rebuke.

Copyright, 1926, by the Press and Pulitzer Publishing Cos. (New York World and Post-Dispatch.)

LONDON, Feb. 13.—Intellectual England is aroused over the question of free speech at Oxford. The University vice chancellor, Dr. Wells, has compeleld four students, as a condition of their remaining in college, to sign a pledge they would hold no communication, d-i rect or indirect, with any organized communist organization at home or abroad and would not endeavor to propagate communist ideas directly or indirectly. This was done because the students were accused of trying to get Indian undergraduates to join the communist party.

The action of Dr. Wells, which took place some days ago, aroused no outside notice until the Oxford Union, the powerful undergraduate body, passed a vote of censure on the vice chancellor by 215 to 92 at a private business meeting. The entire union now is being polled on the issue. The vote indicates the bulk of Oxford men, although not communist, resent any attempt on the part of the university authorities to restrict their political views or activities.

EIGHT SENATORS ARE ILL

Bad Colds, Fainting Spells and Influenza Keep Them at Home.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Eight Senators were absent from their offices today on account of illness.

Mayfield of Texas is ill with influenza; Jones of New Mexico has a severe attack of grip; and Johnson of California, Bingham of Connecticut, Schall of Minnesota, and Gooding of Idaho have bad colds. Green of Vermont is resting at his home after the fainting spell he had in the Senate chamber some days ago and Dupont of Delaware is recuperating at Pinehurst, N. C., from an attack of grip and a fracture of two ribs suffered in a fall.

Del Monte Avenue, Clewiston, Florida—as it appeared on Dec. 14, 1925. The buildings are the temporary homes of engineers. When these men and the other builders in Clewiston have finished their work—under the supervision of such experts as John Nolen, Olmsted Brothers and Dwight James Baum—Del Monte Avenue will be one of the "show streets" of the sunshine belt of the world.

Clewiston Is Going Forward

Clewiston is promising nothing which it cannot—which it will not—fulfill. You can ask for no better security of Clewiston's every pledge than the tremendous building and construction activity which is under way in Clewiston today.

Streets are rapidly being marked and graded—sidewalks laid, and water lines installed. Water supply pumps and generators are in use. Gigantic dredges and earth moving machines are rapidly completing the undertaking specified by Clewiston's city planner, Clewiston's architects, engineers and landscaping authorities.

When Clewiston was selected in 1923—before Florida's expansion began—it was determined then to make of it one of the most beautiful and substantial cities in the sunshine belt of the world. Experts called in to accomplish this, pronounced its possibilities unrivalled—and men whose records show that they are skilled in the development of permanent communities predicted then as now that Clewiston is destined to become not only one of Florida's garden spots, a city where you can live, work and play the whole year through, but one of the most commercially important of Florida's cities as well. Clewiston is going forward! Do not wait until it has passed beyond your reach. Its values are worth investigating.

Hear "WHO"—it will make you dance and dream

"WHO" is something even greater than the song hit from "Sunny." "Who" is the fox trot hit of the season. Recorded the new Victor way with George Olsen and His Music, and with a fascinating vocal refrain, "Who" is youth set to music.

Hear "Who" at once. Any dealer in Victor products will gladly play it for you—and any or all of the new Victor Records listed below. As you listen to these new recordings, you will be amazed at their resonance. The deep bass rhythms which characterize the dance music of the day come booming forth. You can't drown them out—no matter how merry the party.

Who—Fox Trot Sunny—Fox Trot No. 19840, 10-inch, 75c

Song of the Vagabonds—Fox Trot
Only a Rose—Fox Trot
INTERNATIONAL NOVELTY ORCHESTRA

These two numbers from the "Vagabond King"—the robust baritone song and the soothing and dreamy air for the soprano—have been made into two beautiful fox trots. They make dancing a real pleasure.

No. 19901, 10-inch, 75c

What Could Be Sweeter Than You—Fox Trot
ART LANDRY AND HIS ORCHESTRA
Sleepy Time Gal ART LANDRY AND HIS ORCHESTRA

Beautiful smooth easy fox trots. Plenty of melody. Strings are heard, and the big tuba pulsates underneath.

No. 19843, 10-inch, 75c

Just a Cottage Small By a Waterfall JOHN MCCORMACK
Through All the Days to Be - - JOHN MCCORMACK

Two charming numbers by this great singer of songs; a simple "heart song," then a lovely song of promise. Beautiful high tenor notes.

No. 1133, 10-inch, $1.50

The Lightning Express - - - - - VERNON DALHART
The Letter Edged in Black - - - VERNON DALHART

Here's another Vernon Dalhart hit just as good as "The Prisoner's Song" by this ballad singer. "The Lightning Express" is the story of the child who got on the fast train, fareless, to ride home to his dying mother. "The Letter Edged in Black" tells of the news of death brought by the postman.

No. 19837, 10-inch, 75c

I Wanna Go Where You Go - - - - - JACK SMITH
Are You Sorry? - - - - - - - - - JACK SMITH

These are the latest records by Jack Smith, the famous "Whispering Baritone." You can imagine him walking along, quietly pouring these two pleas for happiness into a girl's ear, oblivious to the rest of the world. Well sung, however half-whispered.

No. 19856, 10-inch, 75c

Who stole my heart away,
Who makes me dream all day . . .

The glamourous, gliding rhythms of WHO . . . someone who is who to you . . . someone with whom you always dance best . . . stars in her eyes . . . dreams . . . oh, play it again and again.

ASSERTS POLICE EFFICIENCY IS UP TO MANAGEMENT

President Orrick Says Results Depend Entirely on Capabilities of the Men in Charge.

DISCUSSES RECENT STATE CRIME REPORT

Gives Opinion It Does Not Matter Whether Department Is Under Home Rule or State Control.

Efficient management of the Police Department depends entirely upon the capabilities of the men in charge, said President Orrick of the Police Board yesterday, in commenting on the police administration report of the Missouri Association of Criminal Justice, urging home rule for police affairs in St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph.

In the opinion of Orrick, who is a lawyer, it does not matter whether the police are directed under home rule or State control.

"There are just a few cities outside of Missouri having State police control," he said. "Chicago has home rule and I don't know that you can say the situation there is any better than in St. Louis. It all depends on the men operating the police department. The theory of a professional administrator doesn't appeal to me. New York has had a professional and there has been plenty said about his methods."

Policies Depend On Board.

Orrick and his colleagues were appointed by the Governor under the Missouri system of State control. The association report remarked that the good policies of the present St. Louis board were not assured of continuation when the next Governor appoints a new board. As to this Orrick said: "If a good board is appointed they can carry out our policies if they choose."

The association's recommendation for rearrangement and reduction of the number of St. Louis police districts, for more efficient service and to release for patrol duty some of the men now operating stations, is regarded by Orrick as a matter of opinion. The board has not considered whether there are too many districts, he said, but if there should be a rearrangement, new stations would have to be built, which hardly could be afforded now.

"The fewer the districts, the farther are the police from possible trouble," said Orrick. "One reason the system of reserves we have instituted works well is because the men are well distributed. We have closed the last two substations."

Decrease in Crime.

Orrick pointed out that the survey on which the report was based was made seven months ago, and the volume of crimes here has decreased since then. In connection with the report's criticism of reappointment of policemen who have been dismissed, he declared the present board had not reappointed any men dropped by previous commissioners and had reinstated only one whom it had discharged, as there were extenuating circumstances.

36 CHILDREN DISCHARGED BY SHRINE HOSPITAL IN MONTH

Valentine Party Will Be Held for Patients This Afternoon. Open House Period.

The largest list of cases completed in any month since the opening of the Shriners' Hospital for crippled children in St. Louis was opened, in April, 1924, was reported at the close of January, the number being 36. This compares with 25 discharged during December, and brings the aggregate of cases terminated in the hospital to 586.

The January figures also show 33 children admitted to the institution, as compared with 27 the preceding month, and an increase in the waiting list from 297 to 319. The number of patients in the hospital is 101.

Children in the hospital will be given a valentine party this afternoon by the 365 Club, an organization of Shriners and others who contribute at the rate of a penny a day to a fund from which such comforts and pleasures are provided for the patients. A committee, of which John J. Wuerstenbaecher is chairman, will provide each of the little ones with a box of heart-shaped candies, along with special paper from which to construct valentines after their own fancy. Ice cream and cake will also be served to them. Sunday afternoon is open-house period at the hospital.

REVELERS SPEND STATE MONEY

Russian Officials Provide Refrigerating Rooms to Sober Up.

BAKU, Russia, Feb. 13.—On an allegation that they squandered millions of dollars of state money in night revels, picnics, and the like, a number of officials of the Azerbaijan state wine trust have been haled before the Supreme Court here.

The State's attorney who is prosecuting them said they had established specially furnished refrigerating rooms for officials suffering from heat or excess drink. He also charged that the accused men had converted a ducal estate outside Baku into a recreation center for the directors of the wine trust.

CHRIST CATHEDRAL SERVICES FOR LENT

Community and Diocesan Observances Starting Wednesday Are Announced.

Many community and diocesan downtown Lenten services will be held in Christ Church Cathedral, Thirteenth and Locust streets, in addition to the regular services of the Cathedral. The noonday Lenten services of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will begin Wednesday in the Cathedral with an address by Bishop Johnson.

The Cathedral Ash Wednesday services will be as follows: Holy Communion 7 and 9 a. m., service and sermon by Bishop Frederick F. Johnson at 10 a. m. Noonday service, 12:05 and evening service at 8 p. m.

Quiet Day Friday.

Friday the annual "Quiet Day" service of women of the church under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, will be conducted in the Cathedral by the Rev. Frederick S. Fleming of Chicago, one of the noted preachers of the Episcopal Church in this country, who has been elected to several bishoprics and declined all of them to continue parish work. He will speak at 11 a. m. on "The Christian Interpretation of Life," at noon on "The Correction of Life," and at 2 p. m. on "The Consecration of Life." The service opens at 10 a. m. with a celebration of the Holy Communion.

New Cathedral Lectures.

The Sunday evening Lenten lectures at the New Cathedral will be given this year by the Rev. James J. O'Regan, S. J., professor of philosophy at St. Louis University. "Christ, His Friends and His Gifts" is the general topic Father O'Regan has chosen to develop on the successive Sunday evenings. He proposes to treat each phase of his general subject in a popular way, keeping in mind his well known trait of never losing sight of the practical.

The series will be introduced on the evening of Feb. 21 by a lecture on "Christ, the Light of the World." "The Glory of the Godhead" will be the theme of the second talk. "Love's Mercy" on March 7, and "Love's Banquet" on March 14 will be followed by a sermon on "A Great Sacrament." "Till Death Do You Part" will bring the series to a close on the evening of March 28.

Dental Science Society Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the St. Louis Society of Dental Science will be held at 8 p. m. tomorrow at Hotel Jefferson, with Dr. W. H. Wells as the principal speaker. His subject will be "Fractures of the Mandible."

Girls Tie "Ghost" to Tombstone.

By the Associated Press.

PEORIA, Ill., Feb. 13.—A youth who refused to give police his name was found tied to a gravestone in St. Joseph's Cemetery here early this morning. He said that he had been stationed in the grave yard dressed in a sheet to act as a ghost for the purpose of scaring some Bradley sorority girls initiated last night and that the girls, instead of being scared, attacked him, tore his hair, ripped off his ghost togs and tied him to the gravestone with stout ropes. "When the girls came into the cemetery I groaned and tried to scarce them, but they didn't scare a bit and charged me," he said.

CONTROVERSY AID TO CHURCH, SPEAKER SAYS

Fundamentalist Declares It Alone Will Save Church From Becoming Non-Christian.

Paul and Barnabas would have little chance to be sent out as missionaries by the Foreign Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church, as it is now conducted, Prof. J. Gresham Machen of Princeton Theological Seminary said in his address at Washington and Compton Presbyterian Church Friday night.

Dr. Machen, one of the foremost leaders of the Fundamentalists, spoke in a conversational tone as to present conditions in the Presbyterian church and other churches. Controversy, he declared, is the only thing that will save the church from becoming a non-Christian body. He will preach three times today in Washington and Compton Church, Princeton Theological Seminary, a Presbyterian institution, is not officially connected with Princeton University, though there is an exchange of library and other facilities between the two.

He declared that some religious denominations are now "completely dominated by anti-Christian forces." The Presbyterian church, he said, has not yet become a "synagogue of Satan," but is in danger of such a transformation.

Decision Within 10 Years.

"The rank and file of our (Presbyterian) church is Christian, and the same may be said of other churches," he said. "But there is no reason for assuming that the Presbyterian church, or any other particular branch of the church, will be preserved. The church can be saved only by the efforts of those who see its danger. The question is, not whether God will preserve His church in some form, but whether our particular church shall remain Christian or become non-Christian. That question will be decided within the next 10 years, perhaps within two or three years.

"If the Presbyterian Church continues to be dominated by the party which conceals the great issue, and refuses to face the dangers—the party which prevailed by a small majority in the last General Assembly, and which appears to dominate important boards of the church, the Presbyterian Church will become a non-Christian body.

"No church can be recognized as Christian which uses a specious double terminology, leading to all manner of chicanery and deceit.

"Little Chance for Paul Today."

"Vast forces in the Presbyterian Church today are denying the creed of the first Christian church in Jerusalem—that Jesus died for our sins and rose from the dead. Paul and Barnabas, who preached that creed, would have little chance to be sent out by the Foreign Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church, as it is conducted today.

"Some true Christians deplore religious controversy. This is because they do not see the present danger.

"The New Testament is controversial—it sets forth truth in contrast to error. The truths of early Christianity were struck forth in the fire of conflict. Paul resisted those who would Judaize the church. Much he cared for the warning that he was 'splitting the church.' The Gnostics of the second century were like the Modernists of today, in that they used Christian terms to convey non-Christian ideas. The church was saved at that time by those mighty contenders, Ireneus and Tertullian. Later, Augustine overcame the Pelagians, whose view of sin was like that of the Modernists of today.

"The Synod of New York, of the Presbyterian Church, has voted in favor of licensing ministers who do not believe in the virgin birth of Christ. The Synod of Newark has done likewise. The boards and agencies of the Presbyterian Church are failing to sound any ringing evangelistic note."

Praise for Independents.

Dr. Machen spoke in opposition to the idea of organic union of churches, terming it a "wicked and hateful dream," and saying "God grant that the Christian church may never be brought under one organization. I honor the noble band of Presbyterians in Canada who have held aloof from the agnostic and tyrannical United Church of Canada." The United Church was formed last year by organic union of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational churches of the Dominion of Canada. The moderator of the United Church, Dr. George Pidgeon of Toronto, was the guest of the Church Federation of St. Louis at its annual dinner recently.

Dr. Machen spoke yesterday to the students of Xenia Seminary, University City. He will preach at Washington and Compton Church this morning on "Do We Need Christianity?" At 3:15 p. m., he will speak on "What Is Christianity?" At night his theme will be "Christian Liberty."

He is the author of several books which are textbooks of Fundamentalism, as the books of Harry Emerson Fosdick are textbooks of the Modernists. He is an energetic man, in his early forties, with black hair and noticeably full face. As a speaker, he is plain and direct, without the eloquent rapidity which Dr. Fosdick displayed in his address here last May.

34 Years Serving the Public

Hermit for 48 Years, Dies.

HALIFAX, N. S., Feb. 13.—Israel Church of Chester, a hermit of 48 years in different parts of the forest, is dead. He went into the big woods at the age of 20, when he was jilted by the girl he loved. During his isolation he never saw a woman except on one or two occasions when inquisitive tourists braved him in his hut, only to be sternly ordered away. Church was forced out of his retirement a short time ago by ill health.

CONTEST TO NAME FALL EXPOSITION

Three Days More to Offer Suggestions to Chamber of Commerce.

With only three more days remaining in which contestants may submit a name for the $100 prize offered by the Chamber of Commerce for its exposition to be held next autumn, suggestions continue to pour in with every mail. Since the exposition is to be in the nature of a commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence scores of the contestants have made use of the word "Liberty" and "Liberty Bell." These have suggested such names as "Liberty Exposition" and "Liberty Bell Fair."

The exposition probably will be held the first two weeks in September. There will be an enclosure containing about 50 acres in which will be housed the various attractions and about 2000 industrial exhibit booths. There will be stages and concourses for performances, plays and bands, and seats will be erected to accommodate 25,000 persons.

John S. Berger of Chicago has been engaged by the Chamber of Commerce to direct the fair. There will be no side shows on the ground. Many prominent men of this and other countries will be invited to deliver 30-minute addresses each day on subjects of general interest.

The object of the exposition, as planned by the chamber, is to offer an attractive celebration and at the same time present to the nation a picture of the completeness of St. Louis as a market center and the economy with which goods may be purchased here and shipped to other sections. A committee representing the City of St. Louis and the Chamber has been appointed to handle the details of arranging for the fair.

CITY ART MUSEUM ACQUIRES PRIZE-WINNING STATUE

"Toivo," Bust of Young Finnish Boy, by W. K. Hancock, St. Louis Sculptor, Purchased.

The City Art Museum has acquired "Toivo," by Walker K. Hancock, the young St. Louis sculptor, who last spring was awarded the Prix de Rome.

"Toivo" is a portrait bust of a young Finnish boy. It was first shown in the 1925 annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, where it won the George D. Widener memorial gold medal for the most meritorious work in sculpture by an American artist. More than 80 sculptors were represented in the exhibition.

Walker Hancock is 24 years old. He graduated from the Central High School in 1917, winning a scholarship to the St. Louis School of Fine Arts, where he studied a year. For three years he studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts at Philadelphia under Charles Grafly, one of the leading American sculptors. For several seasons he has shared Grafly's studio during the summer months at Gloucester, Mass.

Among various honors which have come to him are a bronze medal from the St. Louis School of Fine Arts, and, for two years, the Cresson traveling scholarship from the Pennsylvania Academy, which enabled him to spend two summers abroad studying the galleries and buildings of England, France, Germany and Italy. Work submitted in New York City to the Committee of Awards for the Prix de Rome won for him this last honor and he is now in Rome continuing his studies at the American Academy.

The subject of the museum's acquisition is a youth of the Finnish colony at Gloucester, Mass. The sculptor has represented the head and bust in his portrait. The use of the native costume, a peasant smock, open at the throat and trimmed with embroidered bands, adds considerably to the charm of the piece. The study of the head is sensitive and delicate and is excellent in its characterization, but all detail is subservient to the expression of the spirit and beauty of youth. The work is in bronze of a gray-green color which lends itself well to its smooth and subtle modeling.

STUDY OF THE CORONER'S OFFICE

Report and Discussion Tuesday Night.

The office of Coroner in the State of Missouri has been made the subject of a survey by Raymond Moley of the Department of Public Law of Columbia University, New York, and his report and recommendations will be formally read Tuesday night at 8 o'clock at a regular meeting of the St. Louis Medical Society, 3525 Pine street.

The report will be discussed from the floor by Dr. Ralph L. Thompson, formerly autopsy physician to the Coroner of St. Louis, Dr. R. B. H. Gradwohl, autopsy physician and poison expert for the Coroner; Dr. Rudolph Vitt, Coroner, and any present who may have suggestions to offer. The survey may serve as the basis for a new law affecting the duties of Coroner to be suggested to the next Legislature.

Butcher Eludes Holdup Man.

A man with a revolver walked into the butcher shop of Otto Boehm, 3801 Ashland avenue, shortly before noon yesterday, just as Boehm started into a rear room. "Wait a minute," called the visitor to Boehm. Boehm dodged behind an ice box and the visitor retreated and ran east without obtaining anything.

EARL TAKES JOB IN SAWMILL

Son of Countess of Suffolk Seeks Experience in Australia.

Special Cable to the New York World and Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—The Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, whose mother, the Countess of Suffolk, is the youngest daughter of the late Levi Z. Leiter of Chicago and Washington, has just taken a job at a small mixed farm and sawmill concern near Port Macquaire, New South Wales, in order to complete his colonial education. He will have no special privileges in his work and will be treated exactly like the rest of the hands.

The young Earl will be 20 next month and is the heir to 10,000 acres. Several years ago he sailed around the world as an apprentice on a sailing clipper, returning from that rough life in 1924 to recuperate in the luxury of Charlton House, a beautiful Jacobean mansion in Wiltshire with a wooded park of 600 acres.

SOCIAL TRAINING FOR ORPHANS' TEACHERS

Courses to Be Offered Cottage Mothers in Child Health and Psychology.

Women in charge of dependent children in the various institutions and orphanages in St. Louis and St. Louis County will be given a training course in social service, it was decided yesterday at a meeting of the committee on institutions and agencies of the Children's Department of the Community Council. L. W. Grossman, superintendent of the Jewish Orphans' Home, and chairman of the committee, said yesterday that it is essential that these cottage mothers be women of education, some culture and at least a small amount of social service training.

The institute, which will begin early in March, will be held in the Social Service building, 2221 Locust street. It is under the auspices of the Community Council, with the co-operation of Washington University.

Physicians and public health nurses will discuss the health of the children; nutrition courses will be given by instructors recommended by the American Red Cross or Provident Association; child psychology and character formation will be presented by local specialists, and by representatives of the Child Welfare League of America, with headquarters in New York City. Scientific housekeeping and recreation will also be considered in the institute.

Grossman explained that every effort will be made to secure experienced persons to lecture. That the course will be a success, he added, is assured by the interest of the cottage mothers, who have already signed up for the entire course.

A. A. A. PREDICTS TOURIST FLOOD THROUGH MISSOURI

National Motoring Body Tells Nation What Opening of Surfaced Road to Kansas City Means.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13. — The opening of several new, long stretches of hard-surfaced road on the east to west lanes of travel will mean a tremendous increase in transcontinental motoring this year, according to a statement by the National Touring Board of the American Automobile Association.

Taking stock of through roads used for heavy motor travel, the A. A. A. finds that great developments have taken place since the closing of the 1925 touring season. Particular attention was called to the opening of the new trans-Missouri highway, Federal Route No. 40, from St. Louis to Kansas City, which gives the motorist an additional 265 miles of hard-surfaced road.

There is now available 1152 miles of through pavement from the Zero Milestone in Washington to Topeka, Kan., and 1586 miles of all-weather road from Boston to Topeka.

"Of the highway links recently opened or about to be opened, the one to which the motoring public has looked forward with the keenest interest is unquestionably the new highway across Missouri," the Touring Board statement said.

"Right on the line of travel Missouri for many years has been a bogie to the motor tourist. The State was almost as well known for the muddy and often impassable condition of its through highways as for the doubting character of her citizens. But the Missouri mud bogie has been laid at rest.

"Federal highway No. 40 (Missouri State route No. 2), designated the airline route, connects St. Louis with Kansas City for a distance of 265.5 miles, all of which is pavement except some 60 miles of gravel, passable at all times. The distance can be traveled in a little over seven hours, the motorist thus making better time across Missouri than the average train schedule.

"There has been no greater factor in the development of Missouri highways than the Automobile Club of Missouri, which is in a great measure directly responsible for the wonderful road program that is in progress in the State and which is affecting other states as well. The Automobile Club of Missouri is the local A. A. A. affiliated club and under the leadership of Roy F. Britton, its president, has co-operated consistently over a long period of years with successive road administrations to give the State a highway system which measures up to twentieth century standards. The work of the Automobile Club of Missouri is an outstanding example of the contributions that organized motorists are making to the development of their communities."

"In addition to work in Missouri," the A. A. A. statement continues, "there has been a great deal of development in Iowa and as far north as the Dakotas, also on the Yellowstone and Lincoln highways, opening up new stretches of transcontinental highway, of which we must have more to keep up with increasing volume of east and west travel. After the motorist reaches the end of the hard surface road in Kansas, it is now entirely feasible for him to turn north into Colorado and to the northern route into California, thus obviating the heat of the Southern route, which many motorists find objectionable at certain seasons."

AKRON ESTIMATES THAT 60,000,000 TIRES WILL BE MADE IN U. S. IN 1926

REPORTS from Akron are that 60,000,000 solid and pneumatic tires and more than 100,000,000 inner tubes, worth considerably more than $1,500,000,000, will be manufactured in the United States this year. In addition, between $30,000,000 and $45,000,000 worth of tire accessories and repair materials will be produced and marketed.

The retail sales of tire dealers this year will approach $1,500,000,000.

ROAD INTO MEXICO LIKELY TO BE OPEN IN THREE MONTHS

Motorists From This Country May Be Able to Get as Far as Monterrey by June 1.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Feb. 13.—The highway from Monterrey, Mexico, to Laredo, Tex., one of the projects of the Mexican Government's road building campaign for 1926, will be opened to traffic within three months, according to Pacual Luna y Para, member of the National Highway Commission of Mexico.

There are 2000 laborers at work on the 150-mile stretch between Monterrey and Laredo, Parra said.

"The contractors have promised to have the road ready for traffic in 60 days, but we are giving them three months in order to be conservative."

Thomas Byrne Jr. of Chicago, member of the Byrne Brothers' Construction Co., which has the contract to build the Mexican highways, was in San Antonio with Parra.

The road from Mexico City to Puebla is now being completed, Parra said, and large forces are at work on other projects.

Approximately $1,000,000 has been expended for road building machinery, most of the purchases having been made in the United States.

"The people of Mexico are enthused over our road-building campaign and we believe the highways will do more than anything else to hasten development of our resources," Parra said. "Aside from providing employment for thousands who are in need of work, it is demonstrating to our own people and the outside world that our country is on the threshold of big things."

Revenue for the road building is derived from a tax on gasoline and tobacco.

Plans for St. Louis Auto Show Completed

Elaborate Decorative Scheme for Annual Exposition Which Will Open Feb. 22 for the Week in the New Union Market Building.

Tomorrow decorators will begin work in the three upper stories of the New Union Market Building at Broadway and Lucas avenue in preparation for the nineteenth annual St. Louis Automobile Show which will open there for a week, beginning Monday, Feb. 22, at noon, and closing Saturday, Feb. 27, at 11 p. m.

Parking in the garage will not be interfered with in any way until Friday morning, Feb. 19, when the garage is to be turned over wholly to the Automobile Show management, so that its decorative schemes can be completed and booths for accessories be installed.

Airplanes to Be Shown.

There will be several novel showings in addition to the displays of motor cars. One of these is to be a commercial airplane, two styles of which are to be shown on the second exhibit floor. This is handled by a St. Louis concern, as yet unannounced, and should attract much attention. The airplane to be shown is intended for general use and for sale to the public at somewhere around automobile prices.

Another novel exhibit will be the showing of two great, glass-lined, thermos bottle tank trucks. These are the trucks in which milk in enormous quantities is brought from the country districts into a city dairy plant. The thermos effects of the tanks keeps the milk cool and fresh on its journey.

Accessory Exhibits.

The accessory department, on the first exhibit floor of the show, has been allotted to 46 exhibitors, who will show many types of accessories, atachments, conveniences, comforts and ornaments for motor cars. At least three of these exhibits will be devoted to shop equipment which consists of various machines and appliances for fitting up an automobile repair shop in the most efficient and labor saving way.

Three of the big oil companies will have elaborate displays of motor oils. There will be in this department also two full sized and one miniature metal motor car garage.

Busses Also to Be Displayed.

The exhibit of busses will be of particular interest because of the unexpected growth of the use of them in the last two years. Busses will be shown by Dorris Motors, Inc., International Harvester Co., Victor Motors, Inc., and the Weber Motor Car Co., the latter showing a Studebaker bus. The busses will be shown on the first exhibit floor, and that floor also will be given over to an exhibit of light delivery commercial cars and heavy-duty trucks, and there will be three exhibits of utility tractors.

Two exhibits of passenger cars crowded off the upper floors will be on the first exhibit floor. These are the Nash line and the Chrysler line.

Passenger Cars on Two Floors.

The second and third exhibit floors are to be used exclusively for passenger cars. Every car represented in St. Louis by a distributer has a space and each exhibitor is planning to put in as many different styles of cars as possible. In one instance there will be 17 body styles shown; in another, 14, and in a third, 12 body types of the same car.

In the low-priced field three lines will be shown, and in the middle-class field there will be cars ranging from $800 to $2000, while the higher-priced field will include all of the cars from $2000 up to $22,000 each. The show has been carefully "dressed" so as to intersperse these various priced lines over all of the floors, so the visitor will not have to go all over

NATIONAL SAFETY CONFERENCE SET FOR MARCH 23-25

Called by Hoover for Carrying Forward Program Started At Sessions Held in 1924.

The national conference on street and highway safety has been called by Secretary Hoover to meet in Washington March 23, 24 and 25. The Governors of the states have been invited by President Coolidge to send delegations representing their respective states.

In addition the conference will include Federal, state and city officials, representatives of railroads, street railways, insurance companies, automobile manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, organized labor, commercial and trade organizations, organized motorists, the public, safety councils, women's and welfare organizations, engineers and educators.

The first session of the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety was held in Washington Dec. 15 and 16, 1924. At this conference were presented reports of eight special committees appointed by Secretary Hoover to make a preliminary survey of the various phases of the traffic problem. The conference itself resulted in a report dealing with legislative, administrative and regulatory principles, suggestions for co-operative work and a program of future activities necessary to any national program for accident reduction.

Immediately after the conference the Secretary of Commerce appointed six committees to carry on the work. These are the Committee on Statistics, the Committee on Uniformity of Laws and Regulations, the Committee on Enforcement, the Committee on Causes of Accidents, the Committee on Metropolitan Traffic Facilities, and the Committee on Public Relations.

DODGE BROTHERS' CARS AT UNIFORM DELIVERY PRICES

Saving to Buyers Through Prepayment of Freight Loading and Unloading Charges.

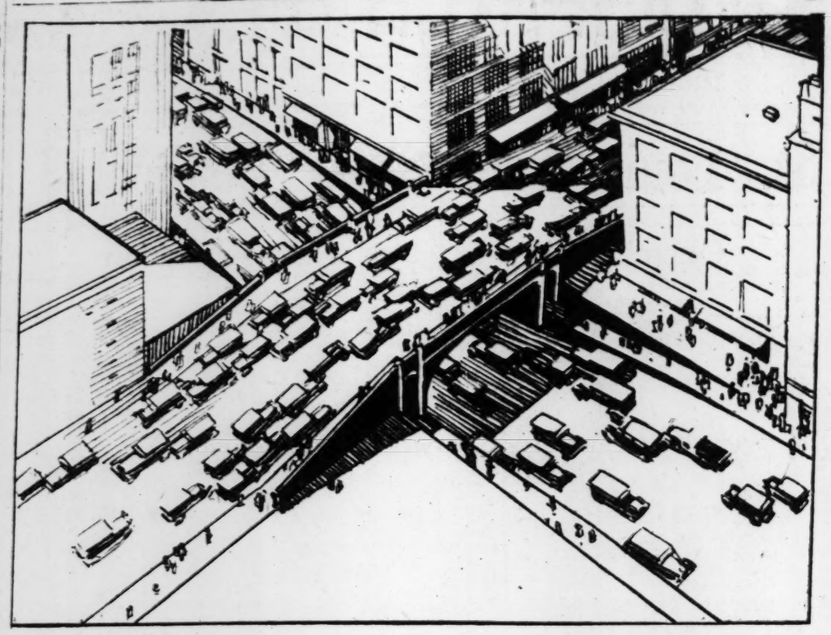
Effective Feb. 1, Dodge Brothers have decided to prepay all freight, decking and unloading charges on Dodge passenger and commercial cars. By scientific specializing, the Dodge factory finds that it can save quite a sum for buyers of Dodge cars through the new plan.

The effect of the new arrangement is a uniform delivery price for all models of the Dodge line in each district. In view of the recent large reductions in the prices of Dodge cars, the new plan gains added interest. Savings to buyers range from $2 on a Dodge roadster and a screen or panel commercial car, $3 on a touring car and $6 on a chassis, to $12.50 on a coupe and $18.50 on a sedan.

"Dodge Brothers always have been keenly desirous of delivering Dodge cars to buyers at the least possible cost," said Frank R. Tate, head of the Tate Motor Co., local Dodge distributer. "So the factory has studied the loading and unloading of automobiles and has devised scientific methods of putting them into freight cars and unloading them and getting them to the dealers' showrooms with the least possible handling costs.

"The effect of this action by Dodge Brothers will be far-reaching, for it will mean that sooner or later any dealer in any line who has been in the habit of making an extra profit through freight and handling charges, in order to have a trading allowance, will have to give up the practice. In some cases substantial extra profits or trading allowances have been hidden away in the freight and handling charge.

Plans for Double Decking Street Corners



Design for double decking busy street crossings to eliminate traffic accidents at intersections. It is on such a design that the offer of $25,000 to start a civic fund for double-decking busy corners in great cities was based by E. L. Cord, president of the Auburn Automobile Co., according to Joseph A. Schlecht, head of the Mound City Automobile Co.

"Traffic congestion is at its worst at the busy street crossings in our cities," said Cord. "The Auburn Automobile Co. stands ready to assist in any measure that will prevent the loss of life and damages arising from collision in traffic. To that end, I am offering on behalf of my company $25,000 in cash with which to start a fund, to be contributed to by citizens, motor car manufacturers and other agencies interested in safety work.

"This sum is to be applied on the construction of an elevated, double-decked street crossing at any busy corner of any city that will take advantage of the fund. If the street running in one direction is lowered and the other elevated by a bridge, we will double the traffic of both arteries, where- as under the present traffic control system the traffic in one street is at a standstill while the other is moving."

These committees have announced that they are now prepared to make their reports which will come before the coming national conference.

The Committee on Statistics will present a picture of the situation as it is today, bringing its 1924 report up to date as of Jan. 1, 1926. It will state, among other things, that, whereas the rate of increase in street and highway accidents has been declining in the last two or three years, there has been a steady increase in total fatalities resulting from traffic accidents and that only six cities in the United States show any improvement in the accident rate for two consecutive years.

The Committee on Uniformity of Laws and Regulations has prepared a motor vehicle code consisting of a model registration and certificate of title act, a model licensing of drivers act, and a model act covering rules and regulations for the use of the highways. This code, which has been prepared in co-operation with the commissioners on uniform state laws, is intended for submission to the Legislatures of the various states with the hope that by adopting the principles which are incorporated in the acts some measure of uniformity of laws, rules and regulations may be accomplished throughout the country.

The Committee on Enforcement has dealt with the problem of rigid enforcement of all existing and future motor vehicle laws. Incorporated in its report will be a schedule of minimum and maximum penalties suggested for all types of traffic violations.

The Committee on Causes of Accidents will report as to available data on the causes of accidents and deductions therefrom, and a program or organization for ascertaining the causes of accidents.

The Committee on Metropolitan Traffic Facilities will outline the costs and the waste in time and money caused by traffic congestion in metropolitan areas and plans and surveys to improve traffic conditions.

The Public Relations Committee will present a program of organization and co-operation of all groups concerned in coping with the traffic problem.

PLANS FOR ST. LOUIS AUTOMOBILE SHOW ARE COMPLETED

the building to find a high-priced or a low-priced car. They will be indiscriminately mixed up for his benefit.

Particular care is to be taken this year to provide unusually attractive and comfortable rest rooms. There will be plenty of chairs and sofas on the three exhibit floors.

There also is to be a restaurant and a number of soft-drink booths. All of the aisles are to be 10 feet wide, which is 2 feet wider than was possible at some previous shows, so no matter how large the crowd attending at any one time there should never be congestion anywhere in the building.

Decorative Scheme.

While the decoration scheme throughout the entire building is to be of a type never before seen at a St. Louis automobile show, and perhaps at no other show, each floor being decorated with a different motif, the greatest attention to embellishment will be made at the grand foyer and entrance. The entrance to the show is to be at Lucas avenue, up an easy incline or ramp. At the top of this the foyer will begin, and this is to be decorated in a most novel manner with unusual lighting and color effects. Down at the end of the foyer, which is to be nearly 100 feet long and 24 feet wide, will be placed a 9-foot statue of "The Spirit of Transportation," a figure of a beautiful woman especially posed and modeled by a famous sculptor in the East. The statue has been colored in natural flesh tints and its drapery is in natural colors. This is to be set in a draped niche and lighted with flood lights.

The show will open at noon Monday, Feb. 22. To complete the program, the decorators, carpenters and electricians will work all day and all night Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Exhibits will be placed in the show beginning Saturday, Feb. 23, and after 11 o'clock Monday morning, no cars or accessories will be received in the building for display as the foyer draperies will then be placed.

An entertaining feature of the Automobile Show will be the twice-a-day concerts by Weber's syncopating orchestras, one of them playing on each of the three floors. These concerts will be given at 2:30 at 5 each afternoon and from 8 to 10:30 p. m. each evening during the show.

The Show Committee, which has planned all details of the show, consists of John T. Salisbury, More Automobile Co., chairman; F. C. McDonald, Southwest Nash Co.; G. M. Berry, Berry Motor Co., and William Walsingham Western Automobile Co. The show manager is Capt. Robert E. Lee, who also is manager of the St. Louis Automobile Dealers' Association. Louis Mois, who has had that position for 10 years, will be superintendent of the building.

CHEVROLET BUILDS CARS AT RECORD RATE FOR WINTER

An unprecedented winter demand for Chevrolet cars and trucks necessitated a production last month nearly three times that in January, 1925, it is announced by W. S. Knudsen, president of the Chevrolet Co.

The January production was more than 44,000, which eclipses any previous January production in Chevrolet history. The tentative February schedule provides for building more than 51,000 units or nearly twice the number produced in February, 1925.

EXTRA SERVICE FOR REO OWNERS

Bulletins Remind Them Regularly That Cars Run Better if Propery Cared For.

Regular bulletins to Reo car and speed wagon owners are a feature of a maintenance service that has been established by the Kardell Motor Car Co., Reo distributer. These bulletins call attention to the necessity of regular inspection of cars, regular greasing and oiling, care of radiators, grinding of valves and removing carbon, relining brakes and other things which must be done if a car is to be kept in first-class condition.

Owners are invited to take their cars to the company's maintenance station, which is in charge of Service Manager L. J. Enloe, and are told how they can have their machines always operating economically and with engines working with full power. Maintenance operations have been standardized according to practices developed by the Reo factory, resulting in marked savings of time and consequent saving of money.

"This bulletin service is working out splendidly," said H. W. Kardell, president of the Kardell company. "It is making friends and keeping Reo owners friendly, for it gets results for them. It reminds them regularly of things that should be done, with the result that conditions which might cause trouble are corrected before they can become serious."

OLDS SIX RUNS 5950 MILES IN SEVEN-DAY TEST

Engine Not Stopped During the 168 Hours — American Record Claimed.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Feb 13.—An Oldsmobile six coach has just completed a run here of 5950 miles in seven consecutive days and nights without the engine stopping. The Olds averaged 35.6 miles an hour for the 168 hours. Oldsmobile officials believe that this constitutes an American record for 7 days at so high an average rate of speed with engine constantly running.

This is the second annual Battle Creek endurance run by an Oldsmobile. Last year a professional driver drove an Oldsmobile 3558 miles in 121 hours and 59 minutes.

This year Lee Barnhart, of the Barnhart Motor Sales Co., Oldsmobile dealer in Battle Creek, and six other amateur drivers took turns in sending the Oldsmobile coach over a 78.3-mile course, of which 55 miles was poor gravel. The route had sharp curves and went through three cities and two towns, in each of which a stop was made each lap for registration. Each time the car passed through the cites a legal speed rate was maintained, thus necessitating road speeds of 55 and more miles an hour to maintain the high average.

Saturday night, the fifth day of the run, there was a snowstorm for 12 hours. The Oldsmobile ran through drifts and over roads other drivers regarded as blocked. The only mishap occurred during the storm when snowbanks filled the radiator honeycomb openings, necessitating stops to chop ice from the core. In the 24 hours, including the storm period, the car made 873 miles. The best day's run was 977.7 miles.

From one to four passengers besides driver were carried at all times, so the test was under constant observation. Careful check of gasoline showed an average of 16.8 miles per gallon.

Less than a decade ago, 5950 miles would have been considered excessive driving for a year.

After the test, Oldsmobile officials stated, the car was dismantled and proved to be in excellent condition.

Observation Bus Is First of Its Kind

Specially designed observation motor coach which has been put into service between Seattle, Wash., and Bellingham on the route to Vancouver, B. C.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SEATTLE, Wash., Feb. 13.—A semi-double decked bus—the first of the kind ever put into service—has completed a successful trial trip and is to go on a permanent run between this city and Bellingham, Wash., on the line to Vancouver, B. C.

With outside walls of heavy steel and interior walls of marbleized rubber, the new coach is constructed on a Fageol chasis and powered with a six-cylinder engine of 90 horse-power.

While the weight, without passengers, is 13,900 pounds, and the outside dimensions about the same as those of other coaches now in use by the company, the carrying capacity, owing to radical changes in design, is greater. Thus passenger accommodations are provided for 18 persons downstairs, including the driver, and 12 on the upper deck.

While the observation roof is raised 22 inches above the forward roof, the center of gravity is low, due to a new departure whereby the floor of the lower forward compartment has been set directly on the chasis frame, allowing the same head-room as in any ordinary coach, but saving a matter of two inches in floor height.

Spare tires, gas tanks and other items which affect the center of gravity also have been placed at the lowest possible points, the capacity of the gas tanks being about 55 gallons.

Seats are luxuriously comfortable. Chairs on the lower floor are of wicker, covered with leather, and are provided with air cushions. Chairs on the upper deck are of steel and also are covered with the same air cushions.

While smoking is permitted on the upper deck, ventilation arrangements are so perfect that no annoyance from this cause is felt by the passengers in the lower deck. Both decks are connected by a short interior stairway.

A feature of the new bus is the large, unbroken windows, designed to give an unobstructed view of all scenery en route.

Another departure in design is in the baggage room, which measures 8 feet in length, 7 feet 6 inches in width, and 29 inches in height. This bus, it is believed, is the first which permits passengers to take trunks.

Use of Balloon Tires Grows.

A large portion of the manufacturers' business is balloon tires, although there still is large sale of high pressure tires, particularly for replacement on cars that have been out of the factory for some time.

FIVE-CENT GASOLINE TAX PASSES KENTUCKY HOUSE

A 5-cent gasoline tax bill has been passed in the Kentucky House by a vote of 71 to 23. The bill provides a 5-cent tax for two years on all liquid fuels used in internal combustion engines, kerosene and crude oil being exempted.

TIRE DEALERS START MOVE TO STABILIZE PRICES

A letter, seeking co-operation in stabilizing the tire price situation, is to be sent to the presidents of all tire factories as a result of action taken by the Associated Tire Dealers of St. Louis at a meeting Tuesday night at Hotel Claridge.

The letter is to ask that the factory officials pay more heed to general business conditions and conditions in the tire trade in making price changes, in view of the fact that in no business are prices subject to such unstability. The letter will call attention to the last tire price increase on Oct. 17, 1925, and the price cut of Feb. 3, and will remark that if the increase was justified, it is hardly credible that in so short a time conditions can have changed enough to make such a price decrease logical. It also will say that the dealers understand that factory contract prices for rubber have not fluctuated as much as have prices of tires to dealers.

A committee was instructed to draft a letter to members of the Associated Tire Dealers asking co-operation in a plan whereby, when a member dealer finds himself heavily overstocked, other members may be able to assist him. The plan involves reports on tire stocks to the association's manager, A. J. Jennings.

Another committee was instructed to consider a plan to issue a sticker which member dealers can use to remind customers that they belong to the Associated Tire Dealers. It was proposed also that the stickers request customers, in case of theft of tires, to recommend to the insurance companies that tires for replacement be bought from the customers' own dealers, assurance being given that the adjustment would be made according to prevailing rates.

New Pricing System for Hudson and Essex Cars

No More "F. O. B. Detroit" Quotations —Instead, Prices Will Be "Delivered at Your Door" With Full Equipment.

A new system of pricing motor cars, in which the old familiar phrase "f. o. b. Detroit" becomes a thing of the past, is announced by the Hudson - Framptor Motor Car Co., Hudson-Essex distributer. Instead of quoting cars "f. o. b. Detroit," this firm will immediately start an "a. y. d." or "at your door" system of pricing.

It is announced that from now on prices quoted on all Hudson and Essex cars in this territory will include freight, war tax and equipment—nothing else to pay.

Cost Delivered at Homes.

"Beginning Feb. 15 we shall quote a. y. d. and not f. o. b. prices," said R. C. Frampton, president of the firm. "The price we advertise will be "the price you pay to drive away," or the complete price at which we will deliver an equipped car at any man's residence. Under this revolutionary new system, any motorist may read one of our quoted prices and know that it is exactly what a complete car, with equipment and ready to drive, will cost him delivered at his home.

"The equipment included will be front and rear bumpers, an electric windshield wiper, rear view mirror, a transmission anti-theft lock, radiator shutters, motometer and a combination tail-and-stop light. This program includes all Hudson and Essex cars.

"For years we have been asked by motorists to adopt this policy. Few persons ever have fully understood what an f. o. b. price was, except that it led them to expect to buy an automobile for a whole lot less than was actually possible. They have asked us to price our cars just as they stood ready to deliver. That sounded right, but there have been many difficulties in the way. Now these have been overcome and we are able to meet this desire of the public.

Covers Full Equipment.

"Under our new system, Hudson and Essex cars will be sold like any other article of merchandise. A man does not buy a ham f. o. b. Chicago, a bar of soap f. o. b. Cincinnati, or a life insurance policy f. o. b. Hartford. The letters f. o. b. Detroit means free on board Detroit; that is, a motor car loaded into a freight car in Detroit. Now does a motorist want a motor car loaded in a freight car in Detroit? Not much; he wants the car, ready to drive, delivered to him where he orders it delivered. Now that all difficulties in the way have been removed, he will be able to buy a Hudson or Essex car just that way.

"He will not find that the actual price of a car is $100 or more above the price quoted. Nor will he find it necessary to purchase a substantial list of accessories, for the equipment we furnish is amply sufficient for a trip around the world. In other words, a complete car is offered, delivered to the order of the buyer, and his only additional expense is for the driving license for the particular type of car which he wishes to buy. We are confident that this new policy will meet the immediate approval of the buying public.

"The prices quoted in our announcements will be those not only in effect in our own establishment, but in those of all our dealers both in this city and throughout this whole territory. The dealers, like ourselves, have felt the public demand and are pleased that this modern method is now open to them."

LARGEST FORD PRICE CUT $95

Sharp Reductions on Closed Models When Demand Results in Lower Factory Costs.

Increased demand for closed models and corresponding decrease in demand for open types, and the consequent lowering of production costs of enclosed Fords, are given as the reasons for the reduction of prices of closed Ford models announced Thursday.

The price of the Ford Tudor was reduced $60 from $580 to $520, of the Fordor $95 from $660 to $565 and of the coupe $20 from $520 to $500.

It has been the consistent policy of the Ford Motor Co. to give buyers the benefit of reduced production costs.

Prices of the Ford open models were increased somewhat—of the touring car from $290 to $310 of the runabout from $260 to $290, starter and demountable rims costing $85 additional.

Prices of the Ford model "T" chassis, of the truck chassis and of the Fordson tractor were not changed.

Just WHY is OAKLAND

WINNING and HOLDING GOOD WILL?

Why are so many motorists everywhere so genuinely enthusiastic over this car? Why are they favoring it above all others?

Is it because the Oakland Six is more beautiful—because it possesses more advanced features, including Air Cleaner, Oil Filter, Full Pressure Oiling System, Four-Wheel Brakes and the Harmonic Balancer? Or because it reveals greater speed, power, acceleration and smoothness of performance?

Each of these features plays its part; but there is an even stronger reason for Oakland Six popularity.

Oakland combines — not just one or two of these advantages but all of them — and yet prices are

What's Newest in Motor Cars and Equipment

NEW HEAVY DUTY TRUCKS BY GMC

"Big Brute" Is Name of Two Improved and More Powerful Models.

"GMC Big Brute" is introduced this week by General Motors as a new line of improved heavy duty trucks in five-ton and three and one-half ton sizes. The two and one-half tone GMC model also has been improved.

Introduction of these new trucks is the first important announcement by the General Motors Truck Co. since the merger of the Yellow Cab Manufacturing Co. with General Motors corporation, which consolidated the activities of the cab, coach and truck companies into the new organization known as the Yellow Truck and Coach Manufacturing Co. These new heavy duty models, with the one-ton and one and one-half ton models introduced several months ago, rounds out a complete line of trucks of latest design.

GMC and Fisher engineers have designed a cab of steel. The cab is mounted with three-point suspension on shock absorbing disks. The front of the roof forms a sun visor. The windshield is Fisher V. V. type. An automatic windshield wiper is standard.

Permanent glass window sections are provided at both side front posts, which with the V. V windshield give complete front vision. There are doors at both sides of the cab. Folding steel doors slide into metal pocket below the floor level when not in use. Above the seat level the door opening widens in a sweeping curve permitting easy driver vision to the rear. This section of the doorway is closed by sliding curtains which slide in a metal track at the top of the cab. The curtains have large windows.

Seats and back rest have been designed for comfort. Seats have springs like those in Pullman cars and passenger automobiles. Seats are adjustable to fit the individual driver. All instruments are mounted on the dash. An air cleaner is mounted in the cab. Brake and clutch pedals and transmission and emergency brake levers fit virtually air tight or have leather boots at the floor openings. This construction gives weather protection at all seasons.

Many mechanical changes have been made. The engines of the two larger models have been enlarged and made more powerful. The crankshafts on all the models are of heavier construction.

The removable cylinder sleeves, which have been a feature of GMC engines, are now put through two separate honing operations and each sleeve is tested for hardness and wearing quality.

A larger radiator is used. New features in the force-feed lubricating system insures adequate oil supply whether engine speed is slow or fast.

The transmission has been made stronger.

Increased braking power has been gained.

The new models are fully equipped.

New Stutz Eight Shown In St. Louis

THE new Stutz vertical eight, which was a center of interest at the New York and Chicago automobile shows, has arrived in St. Louis and is being displayed today by the Benjamin Motor Co., 3021-23 Locust boulevard, whose quarters will be open until 9 p. m. tonight and each night this week. It is being displayed in a showroom that has been especially decorated for the occasion and elaborately hung with draperies.

An opportunity will be given to inspect the chassis of this brand new car, which is one of the most interesting ever built. The new Stutz bodies are five inches nearer the ground because the worm rear drive permits dropping the floor. This, of course, means lowering of the center of gravity to an extent that gives an ability to hold the road under all conditions that is astonishing.

The 92-horsepower engine has nine crankshaft bearings, duplex carburetor, dual ignition, novel pressure feed lubrication, oil rectifier, bore of 3 3-16 inches and stroke of 4½ inches. The entire chassis is lubricated from the engine.

Brakes are of a new hydrostatic design, with separate brake shoes that insure virtually complete braking contact with the drums. Springs are of a new type that gives unusually easy riding comfort. Windshields are of shockproof glass. The frame is full 7¾ inches deep, and has seven cross members.

All body types are by Brewster and are priced alike—$2995 at the factory. Body finish is three-tone lacquer. Upholstery in the open models is hand buffed leather in color to match the bodies; in the closed models it is Laidlaw cloth with Chase mohair optional at added cost.

Body types include: Five-passenger sedan, five-passenger brougham, four-passenger victoria coupe, two-passenger coupe, four-passenger speedster and two-passenger speedster.

These new Stutz cars are good for 75 miles an hour and faster, and are credited with uncanny roadability, great hill climbing powers and startling acceleration. Motor magazine men tell of averaging 75 miles an hour for laps of the Indianapolis speedway, and of accelerating from five to 25 miles an hour in 6½ seconds and from 10 to 50 miles an hour in 10 seconds.

Tire Side Walls Need Care.

Scraping a tire against curbs when turning a corner or when parking, or careless driving over frozen, rutty roads sometimes will wear the rubber off the sidewall and expose the fabric carcass. Water and dirt then enter and rapid destruction of the tire results. Such sidewall injuries on tires ought to be repaired promptly by an experienced vulcanizer.

Servo Brakes, but No Fan on New British Straight 8

LACK of a fan, 6-point suspension for engine and transmission and servo operated 4-wheel brakes, are among the features of the new Sunbeam straight eight, which is the first car of this type to be produced for ordinary use by a British factory of renown. The new eight, which is characterized as a 30-90 horsepower model, has a bore and stroke of 80x120 m. m. (approximately 3⅛x5⅛ inches). Overhead valves, operated by pushrods, are used; rockers and rods being completely enclosed.

This Car Has No Fan.

At the front end of the crankshaft is a vibration damper.

There is no fan. A thermostatic valve is fitted to control the water flow as it rises to the top of the unusually high radiator from the front of the one-piece detachable cylinder head.

Engine, clutch housing and four-speed gearset are bolted together to form a unit suspended at six points from the main frame. The clutch is of the dry-plate type. Rear springs ar contilever type.

How Servo Brakes Work.

Four-wheel brakes are standard, there being two sets of expanding shoes side by side within the rear wheel drums, the hand lever actuating one set directly, while the second set and those on the front wheels are operated through a servo device. The latter consists of a small rotating drum on a shaft, at right angles to the shafts of the gearset, and driven by skew gearing from one of the latter. When the brake pedal is depressed, it applies to this drum a small shoe, which tends to rotate with the drum, but in doing so applies the four-wheel brakes owing to its being coupled to those by rods and levers. Only a slight pressure on the pedal is needed to bring the brakes into full effect.

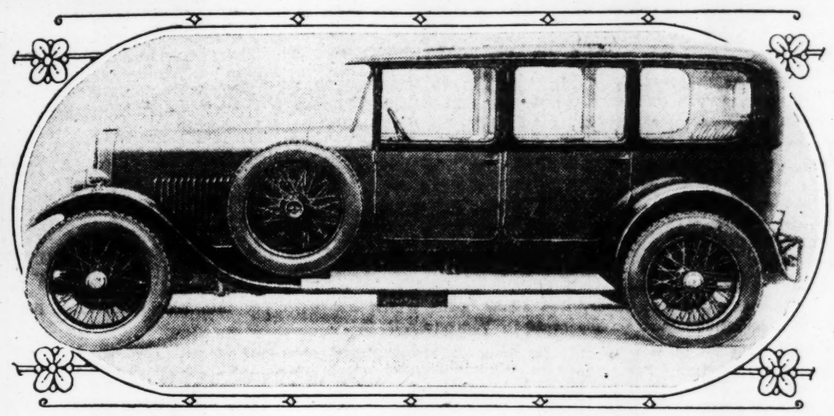
This system of servo braking is found on quite a number of European cars. It has a drawback in that the servo effect occurs only when the car is moving forward. When the car is stationary or moving backward the hand brake must be used. But the arrangement adds greatly to the pleasure and ease of driving a fast car, such as this, under normal conditions, for the somewhat excessive physical effort otherwise called for in stopping or retarding from high speeds is unnecessary. The effort required to stop the car from 80 m. p. h. is very little more than that needed to depress the accelerator or clutch pedal.

The color scheme of the body is royal blue with black superstructure, the upholstery being of blue leather to match.

The limousine model costs about $9000 in England, the wheelbase being 147 inches, on a shorter wheelbase chassis (137 inches) a Weymann type of flexible framed fabric sedan is about $7000.

Too Soft Balloons Easily Hurt.

Learn the correct air pressure for tires and check it—with a gauge—every few days. Remember that four pounds of pressure in a balloon tire of a certain size, for which the correct pressure may be 30 pounds, is as serious as the loss of two or three times that much in a high pressure tire of a corresponding size.



The new 30-90 H. P. Sunbeam straight eight, which is the first eight-in-line car built in England for ordinary use. It is powerful, speedy and expensive.

Replacement Cover For Closed Fords

A NEW sedan or coupe top cover, which can be slipped on over the old one, has been devised by the Wedler-Shuford Co. of St. Louis. The company states that this cover can be put on a closed Ford car and fastened to stay within two minutes. The cover is waterproof and durable. When put on, it is held firmly in place by a nonrustable wire band around the edge of the cover whic his connected to nonrustable coil spring concealed in a fold at the front. The spring draws the wire tightly around the top under the windshield molding, without filling the gutter above the doors, and prevents friction between cover and framework of top.

MANY AUBURNS SOLD AT SHOW

Retail sales of 83 Auburn fours, sixes and eights at the Chicago automobile show are reported by the Auburn factory. The Auburn exhibit was one of the largest and most interesting at this national show.

Worldmobile Is Name of New Car

A NEW car announced for production in Cleveland is to be called the "Worldmobile Eight." The motor is an eight in line with small bore and long stroke. The car is light in weight, but of long wheelbase.

New Jordan Sedan Displayed

A NEW Jordan line eight sedan, listing at $1845, is being shown in St. Louis by the MacCarthy-Archer Motor Co. It has the characteristic Jordan exterior, and is luxuriously upholstered and sprung.

Auburn Four Fabric Coupe Here

THE Meritas fabric coupe on the Auburn four chassis is being shown, for the first time, in St. Louis, by the Mound City Automobile Co. This coupe body is the same as that already seen on the Auburn eight and six chassis.

The fabric, which is in leather finish and very durable, is applied over a padded metal Jath covering for the body frame. The fabric body is light, yet strong and enduring, standing wear fully as well as bodies of steel panel construction. In addition, it is distinctly good-looking and stylish.

AUTOS TO SOLVE WORLD PROBLEMS, JORDAN ASSERTS

Export of Half Million Cars by U. S. Most Significant Economic Fact in 1925, He Says.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 13.—One significant fact stands out above all others in the world economic situation, according to Edward S. Jordan, president of the Jordan Motor Co.

This fact is that 500,000 motor cars were exported from this country in 1925.

"To the average person this would merely signify that the automobile business has received a new impetus through foreign sales," said Jordan. "Instead, it means the beginning of a process which will go far toward solving the economic problems of the world at large.

Would Solve It With Fords.

"Since it has always been my opinion that the simplest solution of the European problem lies in the introduction of 2,000,000 telephones and 2,000,000 Fords, the importance of this growing use of motor cars abroad will become apparent.

"Since transportation and communication are the great fundamentals in the progress of civilization the motor car and the telephone will do more to break down the barriers and remove the obstacles of language, religion, prejudice and custom than any other agency.

"Fortunately the motor car manufacturers of the United States have such a big lead on foreign manufacturers in standardization of design, production methods, financing plans and schemes of distribution that we are in no danger of immediate competition.

"It would not be over-sanguine to predict that 25 per cent of the motor car production of the United States will go to foreign countries within a few years. Eventually we may be building more cars for the people throughout the world than we are for the people of the United States. Where we have one car for every six persons in the United States, totaling about 19,000,000, there are only about 5,000,000 cars in all the world outside.

Since the proportionate number of automobiles to the population in various countries ranges from one to each six persons in the United States to one to each 24,000 in China, the opportunity for American manufacturers and the remoteness of the saturation point are obvious.

World Awakening.

American motor cars have been built for the most difficult road conditions and can go even to these countries where roads have not been prepared for them. But there is a great road-building movement going on throughout the world. The world is waking up to the necessity for transportation."

Duco Service by Every Chevrolet Dealer Is Plan

Arrangements Made So 6500 of Them in U. S. Can Be Equipped for Any Duco Refinishing Work.

By SPENCE.

Because of its probable effect on the used car market as well as its interest to owners of cars that need refinishing, the announcement that arrangements have been made so that all Chevrolet dealers may be equipped and qualified to give Duco service, is one of the most significant made to the automotive industry in some time. When it is realized that there are 6500 Chevrolet dealers in the United States, the announcement assumes the greater importance.

Interesting also is the fact that arrangements to carry out the plan are being worked out by the Chevrolet factory with the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Heretofore Duco service has been available only through the distributers and refinishing stations of the du Pont organization. Under the new plan each Chevrolet dealer will be equipped to do all classes of Duco work, from minor "touch-up" operations to a complete refinishing job.

Complete Duco equipment has been installed in all of the 29 Chevrolet service schools in the United States to demonstrate to every Chevrolet dealer the importance of properly equipping his shop to service Duco.

During the last few months every Chevrolet service promotion and used car representative, as well as all Chevrolet parts managers and service school instructors, have been given complete training courses at the Chevrolet factories in the use of Duco equipment.

Chevrolet dealers may send men from their service departments to any Duco distributer for training in the application of Duco, and they have been assured also of the co-operation of more than 50 du Pont company field men.

With installation of equipment, dealers will be able to refinish their used cars for ready resale, to give quick service on Duco finish to patrons and to build up good will by their ability to maintain the appearance of customers' cars.

Standing Before Our Embassies

TEN prominent diplomats have recently chosen Packard cars to stand before our embassies in the great capitals of the world.

For Packard cars afford that distinction so necessary to the maintenance of American prestige in the business and social activities of our ambassadors.

In England, a Packard Six has appeared at the court of Saint James's; while in France, an Eight has stood, an object of beauty, at the gates of the Palais de l'Elysée.

In either Six or Eight is found the full measure of Packard beauty, Packard distinction and Packard dependability.

Both truly typify American world leadership in motor car manufacture.

Packard Eight and Packard Six both may be had in nine beautiful body types, four open and five enclosed.

Vast Expansion and Advanced Equipment make New Prices Possible

The history of Dodge Brothers drastic price reductions is simple and brief.

A better and better product followed by greater and greater demand.

To meet that demand, an expansion of buildings and equipment involving an expenditure of more than $10,000,000.

Output vastly increased, with consequent reduction in the cost of materials and production.

Installation of advanced labor-saving and quality-increasing equipment. For instance, one giant steel-body press costing $10,000 replaces ten former presses costing $7,500 each, and does the work more efficiently.

Result: The finest line of vehicles in Dodge Brothers history at prices that seem incredible in view of Dodge Brothers traditional quality—

That seem more incredible still when considered in connection with improvements that include—

Rich and attractive new colors.
Smart and stylish new body lines.
Four dependable cylinders.
Absolute smoothness of engine operation.
Greater power, snap and elasticity.

And advanced steel body and windshield construction that afford exceptional driving vision at a time when clear vision and safety are paramount in the mind of every motorist.

The "Pep" dinner will be held in the large dining room of the Jefferson Hotel at 6:30 p. m. Thursday, and it is expected that 700 diners will be seated at the tables. Except for a novel singing orchestra, the meeting is to be devoted to business, with intent to impress upon the sales organizations of the automobile concerns the necessity of the highest type of sales effort and business courtesy during the show.

There will be addresses by F. C. McDonald, president of the St. Louis Automobile Dealers' Association, and president of the Southwest Nash Co.; John T. Salisbury, vice president of the More Automobile Co. and chairman of the Show Committee. Robert E. Lee, manager of the St. Louis Automobile Dealers' Association, will be chairman of the meeting. There also will be three addresses on matters of import to the automobile dealer and his salesmen. The names of those speakers will be announced at the meeting.

COMPANY MAKING MARMON CARS CHANGES ITS NAME

Under articles filed with the Indiana Secretary of State, the name of the Nordyke & Marmon Co., maker of Marmon cars, is changed to the Marmon Motor Car Co., for which the More Automobile Co. is distributer in St. Louis. The change is a step in the expansion program adopted two years ago when G. M. Williams became president of the concern.

Officers of the new company remain the same as those of the Nordyke & Marmon Co., with Williams as president and W. C. Marmon as chairman of the board of directors. The company owns and operates two subsidiary companies, the Marmon Automobile Co. of New York, Inc., and the Marmon-Detroit Co.

According to Williams, the Marmon Motor Car Co. is making an auspicious beginning under its new name. Last year's production was the largest in the history of Marmon and orders now on hand indicate that sales during the next 12 months will show a 20 per cent gain.

GENERAL MOTORS CARS SOLD IN 1925 NUMBERED 835,749

NEW ASSOCIATE DEALER IN AUBURN AUTOMOBILES

The Albrecht Automobile Co., 2534 Salisbury street, has just taken a dealership for the Auburn four, six and eight cylinder lines as an associate dealer of the Mound City Automobile Co., Auburn distributer. William H. Albrecht, proprietor of the firm, has been in business in St. Louis for 25 years.

REO DEALERSHIP AT MARION

A Reo dealership under the Kardell Motor Car Co. of St. Louis Reo distributer, has been established at Marion, Ill., under the name of the Standard Reo Sales Co. S. W. Batson, secretary-treasurer of the Egyptian Transportation Co., which operates Reo busses is a prime mover in the new Reo firm at Marion.

LARGE INCREASE IN SALES OF STAR FOURS AND SIXES

Remodelling the wholesale organization handling the Star six and Star four, which has been accomplished in the past 18 months, has resulted in greatly increased sales. The sale of cars through distributers has been discontinued and wholesale offices have been opened at 21 strategically located points for the establishment of direct dealer representation.

There are now Star wholesale organizations in St. Louis, Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Dallas, Denver, Des Moines, Elizabeth, Greensboro, Jacksonville, Kansas City, Lansing, Louisville, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Washington. These offices, with the Oakland, Cal., and Toronto, Can., wholesale offices, provide thorough coverage of the United States, Canada and Mexico.

While this reorganization has been in progress, the dealer organization has been improved in quality and enlarged in numbers, until now there are more than 3000 dealers and more than 3000 service stations sprinkled over every section of the United States and Canada with material increases each week.

Consistent with this progress has been a pronounced improvement in the Star four, and addition of a six-cylinder model which materially broadens the Star market. The field organization at this moment is swamped with more than 6000 inquiries from persons interested in obtaining a Star franchise.

Cannot "Short" a Studebaker.

The distributor of electrical current to fire the charges in Studebaker automobile engines is now carried under a completely waterproof covering; even the spark plugs carry rubber insulator caps. A careless car washer can't "short" your motor. A pail of water dumped over, means nothing.

REPOSSESSED CARS PROBLEM FOR OREGON AUTO DEALERS

A State law in Oregon, which provides that relinquishment of title to an automobile must be signed by the last owner, is making it difficult for dealers who own repossessed cars. Buyers of automobiles who have lost title to their cars because they failed to make payments have refused to sign certificates, making it impossible for the dealers to obtain licenses on the cars.

ROAD PLANNED TO OLD LA SALLE FORT SITE

Illinois to Open to Motorists Site of Fortification Abandoned 246 Years Ago.

By the Associated Press.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 13.—Plans for a driveway passing the marker of Fort Creve Coeur, La Salle's first fort in the West, and other improvements for the 15-acre State park surrounding the site are announced by the Illinois State Historical Society.

The spot on which the explorer built his first fortification in the Mississippi Valley was determined a year ago by a committee appointed by the society.

The park site chosen is on a high ridge overlooking the Illinois River, some distance below the lake and the city of Peoria. It offers a wide view over the surrounding country and the river.

The site is bordered on the east by the Peoria-Pekin Highway, and on the west by the river. The plans call for a hard road to connect with the highway going through the park and past the marker of the historic fort.

As the park is now, it is difficult of access. To reach the marker it is necessary to tramp through the woods or climb a steep trail from the river.

The site has been left as nearly as possible in its natural state, almost as it was when the fort was deserted by its garrison in April, 1680.

NEW METHOD OF MAKING INNER TUBES PERFECTED

A New York City company has perfected a process for making automobile tubes to shape all in one piece. Only one curing is employed and the valve is molded in at the time of curing. The entire operation is conducted in a single steam jacketed machine in 15 minutes or less.

Advantages claimed for the new process are that it requires no double cured joint, the tube cannot leak at the valve joint, the valve stem will never be off center, and likelihood of pinching is obviated.

The vulcanizing is said to be accomplished in one-third the time required by present methods, and it is impossible to produce an imperfect tube. The tiniest leak would result in no tube being formed in the machine.

MOTOR CAMPERS SAID TO SPEND $300,000,000 IN YEAR ON THEIR EQUIPMENT

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—It is estimated that fully 12,000,000 persons, in 3,000,000 automobiles, made motor camping trips in this country in 1925. A survey indicates that the motor camping novices spent an average of $195 for their first-time motor camping equipment. As about a third of the campers were novices, they spent a total of around 200,000,000. Veteran campers bought an average of $58 worth of replacement or new equipment, spending a total of around $100,000,000.

HIGH SPEED TOUR WITH DIANA EIGHT

Engineers of the Moon Motor Car Co., accompanied by experimental engineers of the Continental Motors Corporation and of the Stromberg Carburetor Co., drove a stock Diana eight sedan 3466 miles through Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida over a route planned to afford the whole gamut of road conditions ranging from concrete and asphalt to muddy wagon trails through marshy, lowland country and steep, rugged mountain passes. Although the Diana test, including stopovers, lasted about two weeks, the actual running time was only 93 hours—less than four days of actual driving at an average speed of nearly 40 miles an hour.

The engineers reported that on the entire trip of nearly 3500 miles only 267 gallons of gasoline were used, an average of 16.8 miles per gallon, while the oil consumption averaged less than a quart for every 300 miles.

"When it is considered that several hundred miles of our test were in towns and cities where traffic was congested, and with many hours of driving through mud and sand, and long stretches of pulling in the mountains, this gasoline and oil mileage is nothing short of phenomenal for an eight cylinder car," said George Kublin, chief engineer of the Diana Motors Co., on his return to St. Louis.

As far as possible we maintained an express train speed through the open country, covering mile after mile at speeds from 50 to 65 miles an hour. Nor did we confine ourselves to good roads in attempting those speeds. Very often we drove at 50 miles an hour and more over dirt or macadam roads badly in need of repair.

Leaving St. Louis at 2:30 p. m., Nov. 10, we drove 219 miles to Paducah, Ky., arriving there at 10:30 that evening, having traveled a large part of the way over roads made exceedingly rough and slippery by rain. The following day we covered 366 miles from Paducah to Chattanooga, Tenn., in 12 hours, notwithstanding rain and more bad roads. We crossed Missionary Ridge and Signal Mountain, a climb of 4500 feet in six miles in high gear without effort whatever. Continued rains and clay roads through Georgia, some of them almost impassable, cut down our mileage the third day; still we were able to make 273 miles.

In the next two days we made 623 miles. Part of this was over extremely rough, narrow brick roads. We arrived in Palm Beach after making speed tests at Daytona Beach where we showed a maximum of 74 miles per hour. From Palm Beach we drove to Miami, where we spent several days making exhaustive radiator and cooling system tests under summer weather conditions.

Nov. 20 we began the return trip to St. Louis. Our mileage the first day was 330, which we made in less than 11 hours. From Tampa we drove to Fort Valley, Ga., 432 miles, in 12 hours and 35 minutes, and traveled long stretches at more than 60 miles an hour. The following day we again registered more than 400 miles, driving to Nashville in less than 13 hours. On the last day this high average was maintained for 300 miles to St. Louis.

Not one car in 10,000 is ever subjected to such punishment as the Diana 8 absorbed on our trip. But not a single adjustment or repair of any kind was made during the test."

FAST TRIP IN OLDS SIX FROM CHICAGO TO ST. LOUIS

A trip in an Olds six coach from the city limits of Chicago to the limits of St. Louis in six hours and 48 minutes running time is reported by W. P. Murphy, retail sales-manager of the De Luxe Automobile Co. Murphy, R. E. Tyler, sales promotion manager, and Thomas King and J. H. Cole of the De Luxe Co. sales force, were in the car.

Running north, they encountred fog on the way to Bloomington, so were unable to make fast time. But on the southbound trip returning from the Chicago automobile show, they averaged better than 40 miles an hour—unusually good time in view of the fact that the car carried four passengers and their baggage.

The speedometer registered 615 miles and they reported using a little over 21 gallons of gasoline, so the "gas" mileage figured out 29 miles to the gallon.

ST. LOUISAN INVENTS GEAR SHIFT TO MAKE DRIVING EASY

A gear shift which has no hand levers, and permits shifting gears at any speeds without clashing or grating, has been used on cars in St. Louis for five years by its inventor, Jasper Blackburn, head of the Blackburn Gear Shift & Steering Wheel Co. In a demonstration run the past week, the gear shift, which is semiautomatic, worked perfectly.

Gears are shifted by depressing the clutch pedal to its limit, the shift taking place after the pedal has passed the half-way point. In the first half of its travel, the pedal declutches the engine, which continues to run while the gears slow down instantly, then the shift is made and the engine takes hold again.

Gears are preselected; that is, one can be traveling in high up a hill, and, if fearful that a lower gear must be used, can select second or low gear and go immediately into the lower gear or wait for a while, then go smoothly into the lower gear. The shift to a lower gear can be made at high speed going down hill—which means safer operation.

The Blackburn shift was first tested for 40,000 miles on a Studebaker car, then for 30,000 on a Hudson, then for 25,000 miles on a Chandler, then on a Buick, and finally on a Nash, which was used in last week's test.

Here is the way the shift works: Backing out of a garage, the driver selects reverse gear and depresses the pedal. The car backs. Meanwhile, he sets the selector. When he has backed far enough, he depresses the pedal and goes into low, depresses it again and is in second, puts it down again and is in high and on his way. All shifts have been noiseless and smooth.

The selector is dual—a pull at the left of the dash and one for the foot at the left of the clutch pedal. So one can drive all day without taking his hands from the wheel.

KING OF INDOOR SPORTS

Radio comes into its own as king of indoor sports in Rumania, where, as a rule, the citizens do not care for outdoor sports but prefer to congregate within, and are always ready for innovations, consular advices state. Although there is no local broadcasting, citizens may now own and operate receivers, resulting in a growing interest in radio. Licenses for two-tube sets cost less than $1 a year and for multi-tube receivers, but little more. This latter type is now required to bring in the European stations.

For the Notebook.

Adding new electrolyte does not charge a storage battery.

A cloth dampened in ammonia will keep the top of the storage battery clean.

With proper care, a vacuum tube sould give from 700 to 1000 hours' service.

A great many parts of a set can be bought cheaper than an amateur can make them.

Input to every tube goes to grid and filament, usually negative filament or center arm of potentiometer.

Rheostat and Grid Connections.

The rheostat should be connected in the negative side of the filament battery and the grid return of the tubes connected to the negative "A" battery, or the negative "C" battery if more than 45 volts are used on the plate of the amplifier tubes.

Health Questions Answered

By Dr. Lewis Baker and Associates

An Advertisement Informing the Public in a Common-Sense Manner How to Distinguish the Simpler Ailments and Symptoms, and the Right Remedies for Treatment. Each Medicine Possesses the Highest Qualities for the Purpose Intended.

Dr. Lewis Baker.

The function of the kidneys is the selection of the waste substances from the blood. These wastes are produced in the liver, muscles, brain, etc. When the kidney function is normal the waste substances is thoroly dissolved. If abnormal, there may be crystals, sediment or stone formed.

If the kidneys act too vigorously the skin becomes very dry. Most poisons and germs taken into the body are passed off thru the kidneys. The solids are mainly urea, phosphates, sulphates, calcium, common salt, etc. When the kidneys slow up, much and varied distress occurs; and immediate attention should be given when following symptoms appear: Headache, backache and spots before the eyes.

For functional inartia, (weak acting kidneys) there is nothing so beneficial as Baimwort Tablets, containing diuretic, soothing sedative ingredients, which aid the entire kidney system, promptly and harmlessly.

RADIO FOR THE AMATEUR AND EXPERT

NOTES FROM THE STUDIOS

The radio audience will have an opportunity to listen to an unusual experiment to be conducted by physicians in the Crosley WLW broadcasting studio, when normal and abnormal heart-sounds will be broadcast. An electrical stethophone will be used in connection with the studio microphone.

This test will demonstrate the method of teaching students analysis of heart beats.

The apparatus has filters which will enable the physicians to tune in or out the high or low sounds or murmurs of the heart.

This unique test will be one of the features of the exhibition of methods of teaching medical students and will be under the auspices of the Public Health Federation and the Medical Department of the University of Cincinnati.

The audience will hear these tests on Saturday, Feb. 19, at 9 o'clock and physicians from distent points to Cincinnati are requested to listen in and make reports of the value of the test. Physicians will talk preceding the experiment.

It is the joy of every program manager to know that those unseen "thousands" are enjoying what he has been responsible for putting on the air. Hundreds of fan letters each day express their likes and dislikes, but it remained for Mrs. M. A. Abercrombie to poll the biggest vote on just one little post card. Mr. Abercrombie wrote in to WBBM, Chicago, stating that his family of 22 were enjoying WBBM every evening. It was stated that there were 11 boys and 11 girls. This last fact made the card all the more appreciated by WBBM because it was considered all the more unusual that such a large family could agree on the program that they liked best.

A Radio Log Dial.

A dial upon which call letters can be marked at the point at which stations are received can be made by cutting a circular piece of cardboard one inch larger than the dial. Glue it to the back of the dial and extend the original dial markings perpendicularly on the cardboard, using these pen markings as pointers to the call letters to be written in as stations are received.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The Post-Dispatch Radio Department cannot undertake to answer questions by mail.

Q. Give hookup of Air-Way 41 five-tube set.—L. H. H.

A. We do not have the Air-Way hookup. Apply for hookup to the Air-Way Electric Appliance Corporation, 618 Broadway, Toledo, O.

Q. What distance should I expect to hear on my Radiola 3A set?—J. G. B.

A. The range of a receiving set is an extremely indefinite quantity, dependent upon so many different and uncertain factors that it is foolhardy to talk about any set having a given receiving range. The range of a one-tube set will equal the range of a multi-tube set under the same conditions.

Q. Would it harm a telephone receiver to use it in place of the earphones in a radio set? Give call of station at Chattanooga, Baltimore, etc.—D. H.

A. The telephone receiver would not be injured. Neither would you get very satisfactory results by using it.

Q. Can I have my Thordason charger connected to A battery and operating and at the same time use set? How can I get better distance from a 5-tube radio frequency set? How long will it take to charge my 120-ampere hour battery with a two-ampere charger?

A. No you cannot use your charger and receiving set at the same time. If you 5-tube set is in good working order there is nothing much you can do to the set to enable it to receive greater distances. If you battery is fully discharged it should take about 60 hours to bring it to a full charge.

Q. I have a 4-tube set using WD 12 tubes and it is impossible to get loudspeaker volume on even local stations. Will you publish hookup of set that will give me loudspeaker volume on local stations.

A. If you can't get loudspeaker volume on your set there must be something wrong with either the way you have it connected up or with your batteries or tubes. Using four tubes you should get plenty of volume from local stations on any hookup. Look over previous issues of radio section for set diagrams.

Q. My B batteries test 30 volts each, is it possible to connect another 45-volt B battery which now tests 30 volts to the two I now have and have a total voltage of 90 volts?—P. F. J.

A. Connecting the three batteries in series will give you a total voltage of 90 volts. However, when 45-volt B batteries drop to 30 volts it is usually time to throw them away.

Q. What size condenser should I use with an All-American radio frequency transformer?—J. R.

A. As you don't say what style transformer you have it is impossible to give you the size condenser to use. Possibly a .00035 MFD. condenser would be correct.

Q. Enclosed is hookup of my set. What is the name of circuit? With the ground wire disconnected I have tuned in 25 stations from Denver to New York. With ground wire disconnected KSD comes in at 180 degrees on dial, but with ground wire connected KSD does not come in at all, and KMOX comes in at 75 degrees on the dial. Why is this? I can hear KSD and KMOX without ground and without B battery. Why? Please suggest changes to be made in circuit. DR. M.

A. Your set is a three-circuit regenerative with tickler feedback. When you connect the ground you decrease the total capacity and therefore the set will not tune to some of the higher wavelength stations and when tuning in the other stations on the lower wavelengths more capacity must be added with your tuning condenser. With your B battery disconnected your tube acts as the old 2 element Fleming valve detector and you would be able to tune in some of the powerful local stations. If your set is working OK without a ground wire, as you say it is, why change it? The way to make your set act normal is to add more wire to your closed circuit and take off the wire from the closed circuit to the ground.

Q. How can I add a C battery to an Atwater-Kent two-stage A. F. amplifier? How much more voltage is needed with the new R. C. A. power tubes for dry cells? C. R. E.

A. In connecting the C battery it must be put in series with the grid of the amplifier tubes with the negative side of the battery connected to the grid of the tube. We do not have the hookup of your amplifier here, but all you need to do is to open the grid circuit at some point between the grid of the tube and where the grid return of the secondary of the audio frequency amplifier is connected to the filament and insert the C battery. The UX120 and CX220 tubes operate with three volts on the filament and draw .125 amperes at that voltage. They require a grid bias of 22½ volts and 135 volts can be used on the plates.

Q. Frequently while listening in on a station my reception is almost entirely spoiled by a noise that sounds like a broadcasting station carrier wave. I am told that this noise is caused by other radiating receiving sets in my neighborhood. Is there any attachment I can add to my set to filter out these squeals? J. C. S.

A. There is no device that you can add to your set to eliminate the squeals that are caused by radiating sets in the neighborhood. The remedy is to first find who is causing the interference. Then have his change his set to conform to some type of non-radiating receiver or to learn to tune his set so that it will not squeal. If he will not do either there is a third way out. You can stay off the air when he is listening or you can see that he stays off the air when you listen.

CHAIN BROADCASTING EXPLAINED BY EXPERT

What It Means to Send Programs to Fourteen Widely Scattered Stations.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—On the evening of Sunday, Jan. 24, when the New York Symphony Orchestra was heard under the direction of the far-famed Walter Damrosch in the "Atwater Kent Radio Hour" the broadcasting was done from the Astor Galleries of the famous Waldof-Astoria Hotel rather than from WEAF'S studio, as is the usual Sunday custom. On this occasion Mr. A. Atwater Kent of Philadelphia, who sponsors the programs given each week by WEAF and a chain of 15 stations, invited several hundred guests to hear the concert direct from the Astor Galleries. Prior to the opening of the radio program these guests were addressed by Mr. George F. McClelland, manager of broadcasting for WEAF.

In opening his brief address Mr. McClelland said, "We have come together under conditions that, to all appearances, are duplicated hundreds of times throughout the country in any given week of the musical year. Here is a music room, here is a symphony orchestra under one of the most noted and honored conductors, about to play for your entertainment. Here you are, a visible audience, confidently expecting a musical treat. Yet there is a difference between this concert and the hundreds of other concerts that take place in a week. To you that difference is only evidenced by this simple microphone. The throwing of a switch transforms what is happening here tonight to marvel that rivals the tales of the 'Arabian Nights.'"

Mr. McClelland continued by painting a very vivid word picture for his auditors concerning the network of radio stations broadcasting the program, the vast number of estimated listeners, the magnitude of equipment necessary to carry the program half way across the continent, and the vigilance of personnel to insure its successful transmission.

"In broadcasting tonight's 'Atwater Kent Radio Hour' 9300 miles of wire is being used to carry this program from the Atlantic coast to stations east of the Missouri River, From Minneapolis on the north to St. Louis on the south. Tonight's program will travel not only through underground circuits, but also over 124,000 telephone poles, which, to use the old and much worn comparison, would, if placed end to end, reach approximately from New York to Chicago. All of these circuits are especially adapted for the transmission of music. The telephone lines, as originally built, were designed to carry only speech frequencies. You can readily understand that the human voice never reaches the high notes of a violin, or the bass notes of an organ, nor is human speech amplified 27 times to the tenth power before reaching our auditors.

"One hundred men are at their posts, at this moment, throughout that portion of the United States covered by this program, to insure its successful transmission. Not only are they in radio broadcasting stations, but men are placed also at 24 specially constructed repeater stations along the route, to insure the program's passing without loss of volume or distortion of tone. Many fo them are at places little known to us, such as Phoneton, O., Beaver Dam, O., Bushton, Pa., Newton Square, Pa., and Morrell Park, Ill."

In commenting on the development of the network of stations, Mr. McClelland stated, "The linking up of a number of stations for the broadcasting of such programs as this is the industry's response to Secretary Hoover's expressed desire to give the country those fine programs which, of necessity, are broadcast only from a few large and populous centers."

In closing Mr. McClelland stressed the educational, recreational and spiritual value of radio in the bringing of exceptional programs to people in communities where it never could be heard in any other way, and read excerpts from several appreciative letters from far flung listeners which had been received by WEAF.

INSTRUMENTAL TREATS ON KSD SCHEDULE

Quaint Hungarian Instrument to Be Heard Again and Week's Other Offerings Are Varied.

Several special programs are scheduled for broadcasting at KSD this week, coming direct from New York. Among these will be a program of Norwegian music by a Norwegian orchestra and Norwegian singer, which will be heard for the first time on Friday evening. This program will be of considerable interest because of its novelty, and is expected to strike public favor at once, not only because of the public's fondness for Grieg and other Scandinavian composers, but because of the fact that it will practically be the only program of its kind on the air at this time. Another program from New York will be the 7 o'clock period Wednesday night, known as the "Mystery Merry Makers," which was broadcast for the first time last week.

Locally KSD will have unusually interesting programs for the radio listeners during the week. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch Concert Orchestra tonight will be all orchestral. There will be one manuscript number, "The Oriental Arabian," written by Charles Previn, former conductor of the Municipal Opera and played for the first time during the performance of the "Merry Widow" at the Municipal Theater last summer under the composer's directions. Selections from "Tales of Hoffman" by Offenbach will be played also, and will show the listeners that there is much tuneful music in that opera besides the famous "Barcarolle" which everyone knows.

A portion of the "Nutcracker Suite" by Tschaikowsky also will be interesting and as a tribute to spring and the emotions it awakens. Conductor Steindel is playing one movement "In the Garden," from the "Rustic Wedding Symphony," by Goldmark. Following this on Monday evening Miss Olga Hambuecham, popular St. Louis contralto, will be heard in the "Fur Hour," and an artist new to St. Louis, Mrs. Margherete Donitl-Burgin, Swiss violinist, will follow Miss Hambuecham. A program of Scotch songs will be given the same evening by Miss Blanche MacGregor, contralto. Friday night a concert of native Hungarian music played on the dulcymbol, the Hungarian national instrument, will be given by the Kotana brothers, John and Coleman, and Dr. Charels Schumaker, St. Louis tenor, will be heard in the "Commerce Hour."

The Wednesday Club program scheduled for Thursday afternoon of the week will be a miscellaneous one given by Mrs. Hotron Watkins of the Education Section, Mrs. J. McClure Young of the Science Section, Mrs. F. C. Papendick of the Music Appreciation Section of the club. Miss Emma Taussig will discuss popular weather superstitions.

Tonight at 8:15, following the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Concert Orchestra concert, Anna Case, sometimes referred to as America's favorite soprano, will present the Atwater Kent Radio Hour, assisted by John Carigilano, violinist.

Wednesday night KSD will send out the Hotel Statler Orchestra and Saturday the Grand Central Theater program and a portion of the Symphony Orchestra concert at the Odeon. On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights a part of the evening will be devoted to New York programs.

NOTED ACTOR ON RADIO

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Once more John Drew is to feel the joy of delighting his public. A longing for the old-time thrill has impelled him to break the voluntary quiet into which he has retired. Next Tuesday night he will be the feature of the Eveready Hour broadcast by WEAF, Nek York, through KSD and 13 other stations.

His decision to go on the air means that he is soon to face the largest audience of his career. Capacity houses are no novelty to John Drew, but now he is to play for half the United States over a network of 15 stations.

The program will be made up of several short readings from his most important roles, including excerpts from "The Taming of the Shrew," in which, as Petruchio, he was largely responsible for the remarkable 125-performance run at Daly's some 40 years ago.

The last part of the Eveready Hour will be taken up by the final act of "Rosemary," a play that revives pleasant memories for those who were theater-goers 30 years back.

"Rosemary" was selected because it provides an excellent opportunity for Mr. Drew to display the range of his talents. Virtually the entire act is a soliloquy, a recounting of long-quiet dreams stirred up by the finding of a sprig of rosemary in an old trunk. There is genuine comedy in the piece, and pathos and human kindliness.

RADIO FOR THE AMATEUR AND EXPERT

ARLINGTON REPORTS AN ESSENTIAL SERVICE

Complaints of Interference Are Outweighed by Importance of Broadcast on Weather Conditions.

Complaints from fans, particularly in the East, that the weather reports broadcast at 10 o'clock each night, through NAA at Arlington, interfere seriously with some of the finest entertainment offered on the air, are met at the Weather Bureau and the Navy Department with two answers: First, that NAA broadcasts on an exclusive wave so that most sets should be able to tune it out if the information is not desired; second, that many farmers pick up this station each night to get information of considerable importance to them and not available prior to that time.

The Weather Bureau points out that 10 p. m. is the earliest hour upon which the nightly forecasts can be released, because the necessary data from their many stations is not in or compiled in the form of forecasts until about 9:55 p. m. To rearrange the schedule of taking observations throughout the country would cost approximately $150,000, necessitate a new traffic schedule with the telegraph companies, and require some West coast observers to start their daily work as early as 2:30 a. m., at which time telegraph service would not be available. The Bureau officials make it quite clear that 10 p. m. is practically the earliest and only time the weather reports can be broadcast, putting the solution of the problem up to the broadcast stations interfered with.

Another suggestion is that as the weather reports take but a few minutes and follow the time signals each night broadcast stations with which NAA seems to interfere, might postpone their features scheduled for 10 until 10:15, at which time the air would be clear. These reports are frequently of vital interest; that is, storm and frost warnings at night often enable farmers to protect their crops and property.

CONTROL OF RADIO UP TO CONGRESS

Davis Bill Would Create a Commission Which Would Have Broad Powers of Regulation.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Under a proposal by Representative E. L. Davis of Tennessee, regulation of radio would be taken from the Secretary of Commerce and lodged with a commission which would have jurisdiction over communications, including the telephone and telegraph.

The proposal of Mr. Davis is being considered by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee which has the White radio bill under executive consideration. Mr. Davis is a member of this committee and he has intimated his intention to carry the fight to the floor of the House if his proposal is rejected by the committee.

The thought of Mr. Davis is that under the White bill too much authority would be given the Secretary of Commerce in the control of a proven medium of propaganda and publicity. Mr. Davis does not doubt the existing Secretary of Commerce, but he is quite sure that Mr. Hoover will not be in that office forever.

The commission proposed by Mr. Davis would be somewhat similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission which now exercises a supervisory authority over railroads. The commission would be appointed by the President, subject to the approval of the Senate.

Members of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee refuse to say definitely how they stand on the Davis proposal. It is believed, however, that the majority of the members of the committee favor the White bill and that it will be reported to the House substantially as drafted. In this event, Mr. Davis intends to submit a minority report recommending his own proposition.

According to Mr. White, hearings on the radio bill should be concluded within the next few days and the measure reported to the House. Present plans are that a special rule will be requested for the prompt consideration of the radio bill by the House.

Secretary Hoover does not favor the Davis commission proposal. He believes the Davis commission would be of a semi-judicial character, and he thinks most of the problems of radio are of an executive and not semi-judicial nature.

Better Crystal Tuning.

The sharpness of tuning and selectivity of radio crystal sets is greatly improved by shunting the crystal detector across about one-half of the inductance coil, instead of across the full coil.

On Tonight's Atwater Kent Program

Anna Case, celebrated American soprano, assisted by John Carigliano, young American violinist, will be heard on tonight's "Atwater Kent Radio Hour." These 15 stations, connected by miles of telephone wires and supervised by trained personnel, carry the program from WEAF's studio more than half-way across the continent and give the listeners in the eastern and central portions of the United States admirable opportunity to hear the famous artists who appear from week to week before WEAF's microphone. Anna Case has a country-wide appeal as a singer of high order due not only to the rare beauty of her voice but the radiant beauty of her personality and her keen musical understanding.

The recital will be broadcast at 9:15 o'clock Eastern Standard Time and 8:15 Central Time by WEAF New York, WEEI Boston, WCAP Washington, WJAR Providence, WGR Buffalo, WCAE Pittsburg, WSAI Cincinnati, WWJ Detroit, WOC Davenport, WCCO Minneapolis-St. Paul, WLIB Chicago, WEAR Cleveland, KSD St. Louis, WTAG Worcester and WFI Philadelphia.

RANGER ENJOYS RADIO

Take it from Hardy Williams, one of the "Farthest North" United States Rangers:

"The most wonderful life is to live in the wilds and hear the 'call of the tame' over the radio!"

That's what he does all winter long in his "Remote Ranger Roost" at Waterton Lake, up in the Rocky Mountains of Glacier National Park, not far from the Canadian boundary.

In the summer months this is an attractive spot for American tourists. Ranger Williams calmly says it even is more alluring during the snow-bound season when the hardy little grossbeaks' chirpings and the occasional howl of wolves are the only opposition to hears to static.

It is then, when he is hidden away from the rest of the world, that he sits in his lonely cabin nights, puffing at his pipe and listening in to all the outside world is singing, playing, saying and braying.

He gets all that the air is wafting, and his shepherd dog, "Ears," equally enjoys the life—listening to the entertainment of his master's "tunings."

With a set of two or more tubes, radio fans in Denmark can hear stations from England, Switzerland, Germany, Italy and Norway.

NEW YORK AMATEUR SHOW

The sixth annual radio show and convention of the Executive Radio Council of the Second District, an organization composed of representatives of amateur radio clubs in and about New York, will be held at the Hotel Pennsylvania the week of March 8, according to an announcement issued today from the council's headquarters at 74 Cortlandt street, New York City. Coming as the first radio exposition of the year, it will have an important feature in the showing of 1926 model radio receivers of 50 of the country's leading manufacturers.

The show will include visible broadcasting from the ballroom, daily and evening illustrated lectures and demonstrations, official participation by the signal corps of the Army and the Department of Commerce, exhibits of amateur radio apparatus, attendance by nationally known microphone celebrities, and a banquet on the night of March 13, which will be attended by the country's leading radio figures.

The amateur convention, arranged in conjunction with the commercial show, will be held on the balcony surrounding the ballroom and in an adjoining additional ballroom. The 13 radio clubs which compose the council will present interesting exhibits portraying amateur activities, such as the international exchange of messages through amateur radio stations and the maintenance of communication with isolated exploring expeditions like the MacMillan North Pole ships and the A. Hamilton Rice South American party.

A Suggestion.

To prevent a wire bulge, or backlash, when unwinding a spool of wire, slip a small ratchet screwdriver in the spool and it can turn only in one direction.

TO BUILD BEAM STATIONS

The South African Wireless Co., at Cape Town, expects to open a beam wireless circuit with England in April, dispatches to Washington state. Australian interests are close on the heels of the African beam enthusiasts and by June stations in England are expected to be ready for operation. Similar stations in Montreal are reported to be progressing, so that short-wave services between Great Britain, South Africa, Australia and Canada are expected to be in operation before long.

LOSES BY LIGHTNING ARRESTER

A baffling loss in signal strength that eludes finding may sometimes be found to be caused by an ice or snow covered lightning arrester. As the easiest and most natural place to install the lightning arrester is on the window ledge, there it is put without regard to weather conditions. This is all very well in the summer time, as light storms do not have much effect of a short-circuiting effect on the lightning arrester than they do on the insulators which hold the antenna. But in the winter time, snow, ice and sleet will form across the terminals, giving a direct short circuit from the antenna to the ground through, possibly the paint on the ledge, which is mostly lead. Although this short from the antenna to the ground in most cases of very high resistance, there is enough energy lost to noticeably diminish signal strength.

BATTERY CHARGING FORBIDDEN

Residents of Zanesville, O., are liable to a fine of $10 for operating vibrating battery chargers between the hours of 6 p. m. and 8 a. m. The ordinance is the result of a campaign to eliminate interference during broadcasting periods. This would be a good plan for every town to follow out. The cracking noise sent out by every vibrating charger can be heard by everyone in the same block with the owner of the offending charger.

What is TONE QUALITY?

TONE Quality in radio is exact and faithful reproduction, in a natural and pleasing way.

If the orchestra is full and resounding, with no "lost" instruments to mar it: if the speaker is as clearly understood as though he were addressing you alone: if the beautiful high notes of the coloratura are perfect, and the plaintive mellowness of the cello creates that feeling of contentment which it alone can do, then the quality is good. It is good because it gives you pleasure and satisfaction.

And that is one reason why you will enjoy and appreciate radio more after you place the BOSWORTH Airset in your home. Its tone quality helps to explain the real enthusiasm which all Bosworth owners feel toward their sets.

They expect something more than just to receive programs.

COMMERCIAL ATTACHES HEARD ON THE AIR

Returning Government Agents Are Being Assigned to Prepare Talks for Broadcast Use.

Uncle Sam's commercial attaches are finding themselves in a new role when they complete their foreign tours of duty and return to the States. The Department of Commerce assigns them desks at the Washington Headquarters for a few days, instructing them to sit down and write a few good radio talks on the countries from which they have just returned, discussing the business, trade and social conditions there.

Although the emmissaries of the Commerce Department have been on the air in many cities during the past six months, the reaction has just begun to set in; that is, letters of appreciation are beginning to reach the department or its district officers from citizens in all walks of life, thanking the Government for the new style entertainment and instruction.

About 100 talks in popular form have been delivered by the representatives in about 20 cities. The plan seems to be one of the happiest means of disseminating news and facts having to do with the foreign trade and relations of the United States, as many of the talks contain unusual amounts of economic material woven into the narrative, which, it is felt, will have distinctive appeal to the "business section" of the radio audience, as well as to those who may be listening in purely for recreation.

Assistant Commercial Attache A. A. Osborne, recently returned from Rome, is now making a tour of the country, and wherever possible he is put on the air for a short talk on conditions in Italy. His itinerary includes Milwaukee, Chicago, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Akron, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and Washington and it is understood that he will be on the air at stations located in Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

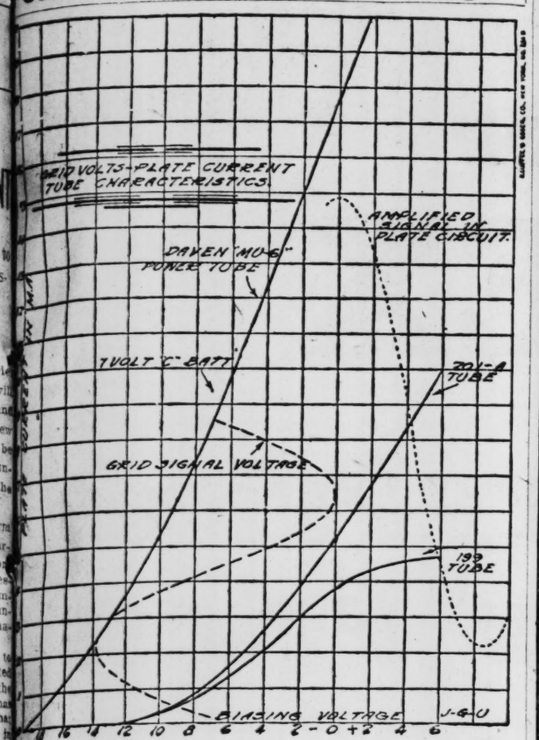
Use of Power Tube in Last Stage



By T. T. WILLIAMS.

During the past few months radio readers have noticed an introduction on the market of a new type of audio amplifier tube. Such vacuum valves are known as "power tubes," and have recently been placed on the market.

But a broadcast listener, who is primarily interested in perfect loud speaker production, has learned little on just why these new power tubes should be used in at least the last audio stage of his amplifier. And without education Mr. Average-Set-Owner, wisely, will not invest further money in apparatus. Then again a few inexperienced folk have "not found their sets worth-while," with the result that many questions arise in reference to the operation of power tubes.

With this in mind, the writer has recently conducted a number of tests and experiments to show exactly what can be expected from these tubes. While the subject is deep and technical, it will be dealt with here in a simple and practical form. Of course, it is not possible to cover the necessary material in a single article; therefore, it will be published in several parts, which will appear in this column within the near future.

Probably it is best for the beginning to make a direct comparison of certain of the characteristics of the several tubes available for last stage audio frequency amplification. For our purpose let us consider a 199, a 201-A, and combine these two types of tubes with one of the new Daven MU-6 power tubes, which the writer has found compares favorably with the best tubes available in this field.

No doubt a good deal of technical data, as well as a lengthy discussion, can be eliminated from this discussion by presenting these facts graphically. In this way we can immediately picture the true nature of our problem.

The chart in Fig. 1 shows this data. From it we see that the characteristic curve of the 199 type tube is a sort of an elongated letter "S", and that plate current rectification begins to set in when the grid is 2 volts negative. Its curve then bends radically until rectification is very nearly completed with the grid driven 4 volts positive.

While the fundamentals of distortionless amplification require that the tube have a straight line characteristic, but the 199 curve shows a failure in this respect. Except for a small grid or biasing voltage change, 2 to 5 volts negative, slightly this curvature is not extreme.

But the 201-A type curve is seen to be vastly superior to the 199; in other words, we see here that we have the much desired "straight line," which starts when the grid is 5 volts negative and continues along to the right until we reach 6 volts positive without any signs of plate current saturation. But it must not be forgotten that even though such a curve remains straight after the grid voltage turns positive that the tube then draws current. In the power condition loudspeaker distortion must result. From this it becomes apparent that the useful part of such curve lies to the left of negative of 0 grid potential. At this point it may be said that the tests conducted on both the 199 and 201-A tubes employed a plate voltage of 90, whereas 120 was used in the case of the Daven power tube.

While the 201-A type tube offers a goodly improvement over the 199, which by the way shows us that the former always makes the better audio amplifier, yet we see that the power tube characteristics are vastly superior to either. Thus, a straight section of its curve exists when the grid is 15 volts minus. Incidentally, it will be noticed that each of these curves is of a different "slope" or angle. This slope is termed "Mutual Conductance" and will be dealt with in a later paper.

When a Tube Is Overloaded.

The vacuum tube is no different than any other electro-mechanical device—it will stand just so much of a load and no more. When the grid is overloaded, distortion of output takes place. At this point the tube "straight section" of its characteristic curve plays a most important part. Further, it must not be overlooked that the signal is of an alternating potential, much like that shown dashed as applied to the grid of the MU-6 power tube.

From this it will be seen that the maximum signal voltage which can be applied to a tube grid can never exceed the biasing ("C" Battery) voltage. For signals of greater amplitude than this it becomes evident that the grid will be driven positive with the result that distortion sets in. Where the signals overrun the lower "knee" or curve bend, we no longer amplify the signal, but rather rectify or detect it— this means further distortion. Of course, where a tube is employed as an audio amplifier, the signal is not one of full size wave, but rather one-half that shown; in other words, it is a pulsating current.

As shown above, we must employ a "C" battery biasing voltage of such a value as will fall midway on the useful part of the straight section of the tube curve. Therefore, a correct "C" battery voltage for the 199-tube is about four volts, and means that a signal of no greater amplitude than this should be applied to its grid. As a matter of fact, working this tube within these limits will produce certain distortion due to the curvature of its characteristic.

The 201-A type tube will give far better service as an audio amplifier than the 199-tube, since it has the desirable linear characteristic, but, unfortunately, a four-volt grid bias, which is proper, limits the signal voltage input to that of the 199. Volume is greater because of an increased change of curve slope; in other words, its mutual conductance is larger.

But since in practice it is found that most loudspeaker distortion is due to the overloading of the grid of the last audio stage tube, say a signal of greater amplitude than four volts, which is seen to be the limiting factor for 201-A and 199 tubes as just shown, it becomes clear that what has long been needed was a tube so constructed as to fulfill this requirement.

Now, by again referring to the chart, we see that the Daven MU-6 last stage power tube easily meets such demands. In other words, where the tube plate voltage is 120, then a seven-volt "C" or biasing battery makes possible the handling of signals of that amplitude of strength. As a matter of fact, the lower knee of the curve slopes so gently that an eight-volt signal can be received with no distortion. Of course, such a "C" battery voltage can only be applied to the grid of the MU-6 by means of a potentiometer, but since this is not really necessary, a 7½-volt bias can be obtained simply by connecting two 4½-volt "C" batteries in series, taking a tap at 7½ volts.

From this we readily note that the Daven tube can easily handle signal inputs at least 100 per cent greater than is possible with 199 and 201A types. This ratio can be further increased by the use of higher plate voltages, say 157½.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

DRAMA-MUSIC-MOVIES

PART FIVE. ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 14, 1926. PAGES 13—16

Invasion of Revue Field Is Striking New Movie Gesture

St. Louis Soon to Have First of Half-Hour Unit Shows Produced by John Murray Anderson for Chain of Film Theaters Stretching From Boston to Dallas—Era of 60-Minute Musical Comedy Is Also Foreseen.

By RICHARD L. STOKES,
Music and Drama Critic of the Post-Dispatch.

PERHAPS you would never suspect it—what with masterpieces like "Kid Boots" and "The Gorilla" embellishing the current boards—but this is no other than National Drama Week. The leaders of the festival, or obsequies, who range from Arthur Hopkins to David Belasco and from George Arliss to Percival Chubb, exhort us first of all to dedicate the Sabbath to pious ruminations upon the stage as an artistic force in religious life.

Tomorrow is "Professional Theater Day," and the public is admonished to hearten producers of good will, if any, by flocking to performances of such oral plays as still totter about in the land of the living. All forward-looking colleries, clubs and phalansteries are invited, on Tuesday, to organize themselves into audiences for the support of good drama. Wednesday is consecrated to a perusal of magazines and books dealing with the stage. Thursday to community playhouses and rural drama, and Friday to theatrical productions in schools and colleges.

New Cloud in the Sky.

IT IS likely that this program may wear an ethereal and belated air to the professional theater man. He is inclined already to give up the spoken drama as unsound if not actually defunct. And today he beholds upon the horizon a cloud no bigger than a man's hand, but one which, in his moments of apprehension, he thinks may augur another and a more perilous calamity.

This is nothing less than a possible forfeiture of the one spacious and profitable dominion still under the control of the legitimate producer—that of the musical comedy and revue. Behind the new menace he sees the hand of the ancient enemy, the villain of all previous catastrophes. The reference is, of course, to the golden industry which has burgeoned from the once despised nickelodeon.

Cinema managers perceived from the first that it was necessary to vary the flatness of their exhibitions with human and three-dimensional performers. These to begin with were soloists, vocal and sometimes instrumental, who between reels interpolated a few minutes of contrast which audiences found grateful.

In the last few years, such casual adjuncts have developed into all sorts of forms—ballets, fashion parades, vaudeville turns and scenes from light opera. The acts are usually manned by local amateurs, and were frequently of indifferent quality.

Fees Rise in Movie Houses.

So long as the picture theaters contented themselves with non-professional skits, or even with the farmed out by the vaudeville circuits, the rulers of the legitimate playhouses were able to maintain an air of unconcern. The Keith and Orpheum interests rarely permitted their headliners to appear in movie houses; and when they did, the latter were compelled to speak through the nose.

It is related that a certain tenor, whose fee is $1200 a week in the legitimate-day, receives $2000 when he appears a cinema theater with his syllable but lucrative warblings. A popular comedienne gets $3000 a week in vaudeville, and $5000 in pictures; and a well-known duo of male singers, who are paid $2250 a week in variety, received $6600 for carolling their anemic harmonies at a cinema palace in Indianapolis. With such preposterous rivalry together with the prohibitive cost of assembling, rehearsing and booking isolated units, it was felt that the legitimate theaters had nothing to fear from these random and stumbling efforts of their film competitors.

One of the first to grasp the notion that such units might be booked on a circuit of movie houses in different cities appears to have been a veteran theater manager of St. Louis, Melville Stoltz. On the Pacific Coast there has for some time flourished a chain of entertainment units for screen theaters, with a circuit of 10 weeks. But the event which really startled the magnates of the legitimate theater was the recent formation, in New York, of a corporation for the production of a series of high-grade revues, half an hour in length, which are to be shown in a string of movie houses stretching from Boston to Dallas.

To Invade St. Louis Soon.

THE first two or three of the series have already been launched, and the pioneer show, a 30-minute revue entitled "The Melting Pot," is to invade St. Louis, by way of one of the Grand Boulevard film theaters, on Feb. 28. For these units are promised professional casting and direction, with costuming, sets and lighting on the scale of the sumptuous Broadway spectacles.

The inception of such a project, alarming in itself, is made doubly ominous by the fact that eight of the 13 units at present planned are under the direction of John Murray Anderson. He is, of course, the gentleman responsible for that list of handsome, clever and civilized revues known as "The Greenwich Village Follies."

If a man like Anderson, it is being asked with something resembling panic, may be absorbed by the movies, why not in time Irving Berlin, George White, Ed Wynn, Earl Carroll and even the redoubtable Florenz Ziegfeld himself? And if an era of the 30-minute revue is dawning, why not eventually that of the half-hour or even 60-minute musical comedy?

At various times Mr. Ziegfeld has announced in disgust that he would never produce another "Follies," so back-breaking has grown the cost of these pageants. His 1925 edition, playing here last week, is said to have broken all records for the "Follies" in St. Louis, and still to have earned only a nominal profit. It would not be unreasonable if he, and producers in the same plight, should welcome an opportunity to shift their financial burdens to the ample shoulders of the screen interests.

All this may make clear some of the reasons why the theatrical profession is not celebrating National Drama Week with any vociferous roars of enthusiasm.

'Kid Boots' and Eddie Cantor Tonight

A MUSICAL comedy praised for posessing a brilliant outlay of costumes and a plot will be placed on view tonight at the American Theater. It is called "Kid Boots," its producer is Florenz Ziegfeld and its star, or at least planet, is that bustling, harumscarum, blackface antic, Eddie Cantor.

The scenes are in Palm Beach, and there is much to do about a game known as golf. The book is by Anthony McGuire and Otto Harbach, the lyrics by Joseph McCarthy and the tunes by Harry Tierney. Edward Royce staged the piece.

"Kid Boots," opening on Christmas eve, 1924, is said to have run 65 weeks in New York. With the exception of Mary Eaton, this is declared to be the original cast. It includes Jobyna Howland, Ethelind Terry, Louise Brown, Beth Beri, Marie Callahan, Harland Dixon, Paul Everton, Robert Barratt and a chorus of 60.

"The Gorilla" Returns.

THERE is a story about a rich girl whose father takes her to Palm Beach to save her from the importunities of a suitor, who follows and masquerades as professional golfer at a club. He has a retainer called "Kid Boots," the role played by Mr. Cantor.

A mystery comedy, "The Gorilla," begins a week's return visit tonight at the Shubert-Rialto. Miss Irene Shirley of New York joins the Woodward Players at the Empress this week, making her first local appearance in "The Bat." She will play "second woman" parts. Ted Lewis, dervish of jazz, heads the new bill at the Orpheum.

"The Vortex" to Play Here.

AT the American next week will appear Fred and Dorothy Stone in "Stepping Stones;" to be followed by George White's "Scandals," Howard Thurston, and Noel Coward's play, "The Vortex," with the author himself in the cast.

Tentatively booked during April and May are "The Dove," with Holbrook Blinn and Judith Anderson; John Golden's production of "Pigs," Richard Bennett and Pauline Lord in the Theater Guild production of "They Knew What They Wanted," Cyril Maude in "These Charming People," Leon Erroll in "Louie the Fourteenth," and Irene Bordoni in "Naughty Cinderella."

"Artists and Models" arrives at the Shubert-Rialto next week, and will be succeeded by "What Price Glory?" George Arliss is to play at this theater in Galsworthy's "Old Irish," beginning March 15.

SZIGETI, VIOLINIST, IS ORCHESTRA SOLOIST

New Luminary From Hungary Shares Symphony Honors With E. R. Kroeger, Who Will Conduct First Performance of His Latest Work, "Mississippi."

A VIOLINIST unknown in America two months ago, but now ranking among the important artists of the day, is Joseph Szigeti, whom the Symphony Orchestra will present as soloist at its Friday and Saturday concerts, at the Odeon. The program will be signalized also by the premier performance of Ernest R. Kroeger's new symphonic poem, "Mississippi," which the composer will direct.

Mr. Szigeti is a Hungarian, and a pupil of Jeno Hubay. Following a distinguished European career, he made his American debut in New York on Dec. 12 as soloist with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Leopold Stokowski.

Plays Mendelssohn Concerta.

HIS initial tour of the United States includes engagements with the New York Philharmonic, Chicago, Boston, Cincinnati and St. Louis orchestras. His introduction in this city will be made through the Mendelssohn violin concerto in E-Minor. The program in detail follows:

Overture to "Le Carnaval Romain" ..... Berlioz
Suite, "La Mer" ..... Debussey
1. "From Dawn to Noon on the Ocean."
2. "Frolic of the Waves."
3. "Dialogue of Wind and Sea."
Rhapsodie, "Espana" ..... Chabrier
Concerto for violin and orchestra in E Minor, Op. 64 ..... Mendelssohn
1. Allegro molto appassionato.
2. Andante.
3. Allegretto non troppo; allegro molto vivace.
Symphonic Poem, "Mississippi" ..... Kroeger
(First performance anywhere; the composer conducting.)

Kroeger on American Music.

THE new symphonic poem by Mr. Kroeger is the St. Louis composer's fifth essay at orchestral music of an American character. The other four comprised two symphonic overtures—"Hiawatha," based on Longfellow's poem, and "Atala," inspired by Chateaubriand's romance; "The March of the Pioneers," written for the St. Louis Pageant in 1914, and an overture, "Missouri," composed for the centenary of Missouri's admission to statehood.

His latest work is an effort to transcribe the Mississippi River into tones; for him there is epic stature in its spirit, its physical being, its history, and the culture that has grown up about it. He has sought also to write distinctively American music—how successfully, he confesses, only a hearing will show.

"Perhaps," he says, "the influence of German music may be seen in my work, as it is in the compositions of Chadwick, Horatio Parker, Dudley Buck and even Edward MacDowell; or as the influence of French music is audible in the works of our younger American composers. Leo Sowerby at times achieves a genuinely Lake Superior episode of his suite, 'From the Northland.'

"The real American music, I believe, will have an optimistic song at its heart, and yet it will be grim. Our forefathers were forced into grim attitudes of mind by the very physical bigness of the land which they, as pioneers, set out to conquer; and the sweep and surge of that bigness will be in the music, too.

"The literary equivalent of true American music already exists, according to my opinion, in the poems of Walt Whitman."

Musical Zoo at Today's "Pop."

WITH the shade of the late Camille Saint-Saens as its guide, the audience at the orchestra's popular concert, this afternoon at the Odeon, will pay a visit to a musical zoo, by means of the French composer's 'Carnival of Animals." In this zoo are lions, hens and roosters, wild asses, turtles, elephants, kangaroos, fish, birds, fossils, pianists and gentlemen with long ears. Under these disguises, Saint-Saens is believed to have satirized his musical enemies. Except for one familiar number, "The Swan," often played as a cello solo, the composer would not permit his work to be performed publicly until after his death.

Director Ganz will make preliminary remarks in explanation of the work. There are parts for two pianos, which will be played by Mrs. David Kriegshaber and Mrs. Corinne Schroeder-Frederick. The soloists will be Marietta Schumacher, St. Louis soprano, and Alfred Schmied, 18-year-old student at McBride High School. The program follows:

March, "St. Louis Symphony" ..... Ganz
Overture to "If I Were King" ..... Adam
Hungarian Fantasy for Pianoforte ..... Liszt
(Mr. Schmied.)
Adagio pathetique ..... Godard
Arias with orchestra:
(a) "Vissi d'arte," from "La Tosca" ..... Puccini
(b) Ballatella from "I Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
(Miss Schumacher.)
"Carneval des Animaux" ..... Saint-Saens
..... Saint-Saens
"Skater's Waltz" ..... Waldteufel

Fraser Gange is Soloist.

FOR its concert Tuesday night at the Odeon, the Apollo Club has engaged Fraser Gange, bass-baritone, who has sung at the White House for President and Mrs. Coolidge, and was a soloist in a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony under the direction of William Mengelberg.

His program of individual numbers is of unusual quality, and includes the following: "Bois epais," Lully; "La Partenza," Beethoven; "Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves,"

'Lulu Belle' Is Vivid, Sardonic Tragedy of Blackamoor Carmen

Tawny Heroine, Played by Lenore Ulric, Rises From Harlem Basement to Silken Boudoir in Paris, and Is Slain by an Ebon Don Jose—"Great Gatsby" Reaches the Stage.

By ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT,
Drama Critic of the New York World.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.

A BRUTAL, sardonic, vivid play, tumultuous and crowded with life—that is the melodrama over which David Belasco has been mulling these many seasons and which finally on Tuesday night he presented at his own theater—presented in spendthrift fashion with the no longer lost Lenore Ulric in the leading role. They call it "Lulu Belle."

"Lulu Belle" is the work of Edward Sheldon—the Edward Sheldon of "Salvation Nell." This time he has worked in collaboration with Charles MacArthur, a vagrant newspaperman from out Chicago way.

Between them they have wrought a Harlem "Carmen." Between them they have told the tale of a dusky meteorite whose trajectory is from the dance floor of the Elite Grotto in a Harlem basement to a dainty, silken, wicked boudoir in the Avenue Marigny, Paris.

Vengeance of the Jungle.

THERE, at the end, we find her, snaky and content, with pearls roped about her neck, with attendants bowing and scraping all around her, with flowers falling at her feet and perfume in the air.

And there, at the end, he finds her, too—the Negro lad to whom, years before, she had given the biggest bum's rush in Harlem history, and who had been dragged off to jail with the tinkling laughter of Lulu Belle in his ears.

Now he has crawled across the world to be with her again, and when she spits on him the silken boudoir becomes for a moment a bit of the ancestral jungle. For, on the satin coverlet of her royal bed, he kills her with his bare and bitter hands, and he is whimpering over her in bewilderment and sorrow as the final curtain falls.

This "Carmencita and the Barber"—wrought in the racy jazz speech of the New York streets and told to the rhythms of the Charleston—has, I think, been finely imagined and executed with savage glee. It falters only once, and then considerably. The greater part of the second of its four acts is given over to a dull, heavy-handed, dreary effort at comic relief, wherein Lulu Belle seduces and robs a passing bankroll from Syracuse. As written or as played (or both, perhaps), this emerges as a leaf out of a burlesque show that cheapens and depresses an otherwise living, unflagging play.

Chorus of Swarthy Hags.

MR. BELASCO has marshalled a great troupe for "Lulu Belle." For the most part he has turned the Negro roles over to Negro players, and the performance is the better on that account. By this stroke of casting he reaps a rich reward in the right flavor which all the scenes of tumult and jubilation have—in particular that fine panoramic first act when the scenes in a pool of light on a "San Juan" street corner are played to a gibbering, hooting accompaniment from the old crones who brood over the play like a Greek chorus from all the tenement fire-escapes as far as the eye can see and the ear can hear.

There is excellent work in secondary roles by John Harrington and Jean Delval. There is superb work in the two central roles by Henry Hull as the avenger from Harlem, and by Miss Ulric as Lulu Belle. Mr. Hull came into his own in the final act, for which he had been saving up all evening. Miss Ulric gave herself without stint from the first. She seemed in bad voice on the opening night, but as the merciless, exultant Lulu Belle she played with flashing skill and all the enkindling joy of being alive.

The Great Gatsby On the Stage.

A DRAMATIZATION of "The Great Gatsby," which is being presented to bulging audiences at the Ambassador, is the play which Owen Davis fashioned from the fine, vivid novel of Scott Fitzgerald. The adapter has carried the book over onto the stage with almost the minimum of spilling; the result is a steadily interesting play, with a cast chosen with a good deal of shrewdness and then goaded into giving a vociferous performance.

"The Great Gatsby" is, to my notion, an engrossing book written with fine art. It is notable for its portrait of the shiny bounder, Gatsby, a portrait painted with humor and with compassion. It is notable, too, for its acute sensitiveness to the changing complexion of the times, its almost journalistic report on the post-war manners of Great Neck, which is plausibly credited with having inspired its gaudy West Egg, Long Island.

This novel, wherewith Master Fitzgerald conquered new territory, has now been done into a play that adopts its substance without its sequence, and for its purposes, makes only one small shift in the personnel. For the convenience of a playwright who did not want to pick up his play and go traipsing all over Long Island with it, the obscure fellow with whose wife Buchanan dallies so disastrously is now given a job as chauffeur under Buchanan's own roof and so moves into the play, bag and, as you might say, baggage.

Criminal and Pathetic.

GATSBY, as you ought to know already, old sport, is a young climber out of the unclassified Middle West who, in the freemasonry of the training camps, when all doors were open to personable young officers, caught a glimpse of the kind of interior and the kind of girl he might never even have dreamed of had they really kept us out of war.

The play employes a prologue to reveal a moment out of that inciting 1917 prelude to his tragedy. Then, in the post-war scenes it devotes itself to his crude, bold reach for the place in this world and the things of this world he thought would lift him to her level. It is a study of the rise and fall of the great Gatsby, that criminal, child-like, grotesque, pathetic great Gatsby.

James Rennie proved, I think, a felicitous choice for this role—the made-while-you-wait gentleman of Fitzgerald's imagining. Then Elliot Cabot as Tom Buchanan and Edward H. Wever as Nick Carroway afforded most nicely graded contrasts to bring out Gatsby's weakness and strength. And there are good bits managed by Florence Eldridge as Daisy Buchanan, Catherina Willard as Jordan Baker, Charles Dixon as Meyer Wolfsheim and Robert W. Craig as Wilson.

Enesco Draws Parallel As to Music Between Rumania and America

In Both Tonal Art Is of Recent Growth, and Both Derive Folksongs From Conquered or Once Enslaved Elements.

By OLGA SAMAROFF.

THAT the internationalism of American musical life is one of its interesting and important features can scarcely be denied. Believing in the potent influence exercised upon our national music development by thought contact with the leading creative minds of other countries, I have asked Georges Enesco, leader of musical affairs in Rumania, to speak through these columns.

Mr. Enesco and his works are so well known in the musical world that it seems superfluous to give even a brief outline of his career here, but for the benefit of those readers who do not closely follow musical affairs, I will mention a few facts concerning his life, which have a bearing upon the musical development in Rumania of which he himself will speak later on.

IN order to realize his true significance not only as a composer and executant artist, but as a national figure in the world of musical art, it is necessary to remind ourselves briefly of Rumanian history.

Rumania's Musical Evolution.

Rumania is developing what is probably the newest vital musical life in the Old World. In our splendid isolation, we Americans do not always necessarily take the kind of interest in international politics which would produce a profound knowledge of the complicated and entangled history of that corner of Europe, including and adjacent to the Balkan states, which Europeans are apt to watch anxiously as a sort of intermittently erupting volcano, conspicuous for causing incessant trouble in international affairs.

Church and Gypsy Music.

AS a matter of fact, the history of Rumania (and, by the way, the country itself was pronounced by the Rumanian Geographical Society at a meeting in 1904 to be outside of the Balkan Peninsula, in which it should not be included) consists in centuries of such involved invasions, conquests, foreign dominations and mixture of races that the student of Rumanian music can welcome with relief the realization that Rumania, as a united country, exists only since 1861, when the ratification of the election of Prince Alexander John Cuza, uniting the Walachian and Moldanian principalities as a single country, under the name of Rumania, was effected.

In spite of an ancient treasure of folksong, to which each invading race contributed its share, Rumanian music, nationally speaking, only appeared upon the scene of international musical affairs in the person of Mr. Enesco, the country's first great creative artist.

The grandson of a priest of the Orthodox Greek Church, and the son of a man who had attained considerable rank and importance, the development of Mr. Enesco's talent, had it not been for his father's breadth of vision, might have suffered severely through the handicap of national prejudice against music as a profession for well-born men.

Music, up to the time Mr. Enesco's education began, had been mostly confined to the purely ecclesiastical necessities of the church, folk-singing of the peasants and music-making of the Tziganes, who, until the middle of the last century, were slaves.

Played at Rumanian Court.

AT the very time when musicians in other parts of Europe were enjoying princely honors, Enesco's father was seriously urged to give his son "an honorable profession" rather than let him devote himself to the art so bound up in the local prejudices with the despised caste of the gypsies.

The influence of Prince Charles of Hohenzollern Sigmaringen, who was elected Prince of Rumania in 1866, and made the country's first King in 1871, joined with that of his gifted wife, Princess Elizabeth of Wied, who is usually associated in our minds with her literary nom-de-plume of "Carmen Sylva," had already introduced music as a fine art into the palace at Bucharest, and there it was that young Enesco, having already at the age of 16, won a striking success in Paris with the production of his "Rumanian Poem," proceeded to devote himself and lay the foundation of a national school of Rumanian music, based, through the medium of his own creative gifts, on his profound knowledge of international music, combined with the influence of the ancient folklore treasure of his country.

Those students at the Juillard Foundation Graduate School who are enjoying the ensemble classes Mr. Enesco is conducting there will doubtless find it interesting to realize that his astounding knowledge of chamber music literature originated in daily concerts at the Court of Queen Elizabeth of Rumania, the picturesque "Carmen Sylva," in which he took part from the time he was 16 until he was 25.

Carmen Sylva a Pianist.

I AM indebted to Mrs. Carlos Salzedo, wife of the well-known composer and harpist, for a glimpse into a correspondence she had with one of the Court Chamberlains of Queen Elizabeth of Rumania. In these letters the musical mornings at court are vividly described. Mr. Enesco was the central musical figure, of course. The programs covered the widest possible field, and Queen Elizabeth, who was an excellent pianist, often took part in the performances. At other times the music would set her imagination on fire and she would improvise one of her glowing poems, which, though often lacking polish of style, show a real imaginative gift.

I am the more indebted to Mrs. Salzedo or any outside source of information concerning Mr. Enesco because it is very difficult to make him talk about himself. Reserved, almost shy in spite of his courtliness of manner, Mr. Enesco is so far removed from any spirit of self-advertising that an uninformed interviewer would have much trouble in getting beyond the sympathetic impression of a thoughtful, sensitive, highly cultured man which is bound to be made by his whole personality.

It is not at all difficult, however, to induce Mr. Enesco to talk about music. The love of music burns in a nature such as his like a flame which, inextinguishable as it always is, flares up with extraordinary power when music or even the discussion of it arouses him.

Oriental Characteristics.

MY first musical question was one regarding the character of Rumanian folk songs. Mr. Enesco replied, with interesting illustrations on the piano which I am unhappily unable to pass on to my readers, that the folk lore of Rumania must be roughly divided into two classes: the peasant type and the gypsy type.

The frequent invasions of the Rumanian plains forced the agricultural peasants to take refuge in the mountains, and very characteristic songs and dances of diatonic build and melancholy mood are found in the Carpathian Mountains and Transylvanian Alps, along whose crests the boundary between Rumania and Hungary is drawn.

But while these simple tunes are not radically different in some respects from folk music of adjacent countries, they have one very characteristic feature; namely, unexpected Oriental phrases, some of them quite Arabian in quality, which almost always form part of the musical texture. The influence of migratory Oriental peoples is felt everywhere, even in the music of the Rumanian branch of the Greek Orthodox Church.

Mr. Enesco tells of meeting an East Indian in Paris and of recognizing in some Hindu music he performed a close affinity with the music of the Rumanian Church, whose priests frequently use the quarter-tones, so much discussed with regard to modern music, in their nasal intonements of the ecclesiastical services in Rumania.

American Parallels.

THE Rumanian folk music, like most others, shows the profound connection between the history of humanity and the history of art. A closer study of Rumanian history as connected with music might reveal some interesting analogies with our own American development. The mixture of peoples, even if under quite different conditions and on a totally different scale; the fact of having the most vital folk material come from the victims of invasion and conquest, i. e., the Rumanian peasant and the American Indian, or from formerly enslaved peoples, i. e., the Rumanian gypsy and the American Negro; and the comparatively recent growth of a public concert life, all seem to link us in a certain musical development sense with Rumania, which, until late, in the last century, was much more remote from the musical life of Europe than we were.

Mr. Enesco has an interesting point of view with regard to the use of folklore in music composition. He contends that this material lends itself infinitely better to a free rhapsodic form of writing than to so-called symphonic form. He explained how the peasants of his country will dance for an hour at a time to a tune reiterating the same theme or free variations on it, and that, although the melodic shape and general texture of folk music may profoundly influence a composer's idiom, a literal use of such thematic material in symphonic form forces it into a sphere to which it is totally foreign. Mr. Enesco has himself used Rumanian folk themes in free rhapsodic form. He relates that some interesting collections of Rumanian folk songs and dances have been taken by phonograph.

Sunday Ban on Beauty Parlors.

By the Associated Press.

LYNN, Mass., Feb. 13. — Mayor Bauer has ordered the police to keep watch over the city's beauty parlors, to see that they refrain from operating on Sunday.

SZIGETI, VIOLINIST, IS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SOLOIST

MEMORIAL DAY FOR GERMANY

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, Feb. 13.—Thousands of German soldiers' graves at home and abroad will be decorated on German memorial day, Feb. 28. For the first time, efforts are being made to set aside one day in the year to honor soldier dead in the manner of memorial day in the United States.

While the Government has not as yet been induced to declare the last day of February a legal holiday, the Society of the Care of Soldiers' Graves has obtained pledges from virtually all civic and patriotic associations to participate in the exercises.

Surprise Package

Send Coupon for the Best Beauty Aids

By Edna Wallace Hopper

Some of my aids to beauty bring quick and surprising results. They combine the best factors I have found in 40 years of world search. To them I owe my beauty and youth more than to any others.

I have seen girls fairly transformed by them inside half an hour. And women seem to drop ten years.

One is my White Youth Clay. That purges the skin, combats lines and wrinkles, brings a youthful glow. Your mirror will show an amazing change from the first application.

One is my Youth Cream, to follow the clay. It combines the best factors I have found to foster, feed and preserve the skin. Two of them are products of lemon and strawberry.

One is my Powder, the sort we stage stars use. We who must ever look our best.

All toilet counters now supply these helps in the name of Edna Wallace Hopper. Send the coupon with 10 cents to cover postage and packing, and you'll receive a trial package—enough to test them all. Also my Beauty Book. I urge every girl and woman to accept this offer. It may lead to great results.

BEWARE THE COUGH OR COLD THAT HANGS ON

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Creomulsion Company, Atlanta, Ga.

Medical News Service of St. Louis Tuberculosis Society

No. 18—Methods in the Prevention of Tuberculosis.

THIS is the eighteenth of a series of articles on matters pertaining to tuberculosis which are being prepared by medical experts and distributed among St. Louis physicians by the Tuberculosis Society of St. Louis. The others will be sent out every week, and will contain the latest medical information on the subject.

The prevention of tuberculosis is a very complex problem. It involves direct measures which can be applied by officials, and indirect efforts to improve personal and family hygiene which can only be obtained by the voluntary cooperation of the individual citizens. For example, pasteurization of the milk supply can be had directly by official action of the health authorities. Segregation of open cases is made possible by direct official action when the city Government provides facilities for care of such cases. The other measures for preventing the transfer of tuberculosis germs from the sick to the well depend in greatest measure, not upon official action of the health authorities under their police powers, but upon the education of the consumptive and his family.

In opportunity for such education the family physician occupies the most favored position. His advice carries greater weight than that received from any other source, and is more likely to be followed. The physician may feel that he cannot give the time in all cases to improve this opportunity for educating the consumptive and the family, but by early discovery and prompt reporting of cases he can get this service for his patients from the Health Department. The physician can prevent the spread of the germs by early discovery of cases and by giving the proper instructions to the individual and to those about him. By prompt reporting to the Health Department he can obtain continuance of this advice by Public Health nurses—care of patients in hospitals or sanatoriums when necessary.

Efforts of Physicians.

In the field of preventing tuberculosis by building up the resistance of the individual the physician has scarcely scratched the surface. Further significant reduction in the tuberculosis death rate will depend, in greatest measure, upon the efforts made by practicing physicians to prevent this disease. Its prevention may be divided into two fundamentals:

1. Prevention of the spread of the germs from the sick to the well.

2. The building up of the resistance of the individual to tuberculosis.

There is a widespread immunity to tuberculosis in human individuals. Tuberculosis infection is so common that if such an immunity did not exist we should all die of the disease. Unfortunately this immunity is easily broken down. There is a very delicate adjustment between immunity and susceptibility in many individuals. The under-nourished child and the rapidly growing child furnish ready material for a tuberculosis infection. The pre-adolescent and adolescent periods for obvious reasons are fraught with danger because of lowered resistance.

The Major Role.

The physician has a big opportunity to play the major role in further reducing tuberculosis death rates if he will devote some of his energy to building health in individuals. He must have for his objective the production and maintenance of health, rather than the curing of disease. It matters little whether he is a general practitioner or a specialist. All physicians see every day children and young adults below par physically and in need of advice on fresh air, rest, food, exercise and personal hygiene in general. By making this extra effort to promote the health the physician can cut off a large part of the material upon which tuberculosis feeds.

Physicians have never failed to respond to an appeal for public service. Self-sacrificing devotion to the highest ideals of the profession characterizes the daily record of our best physicians. The prevention of tuberculosis affords the physician an opportunity to perform a great public service, and although it may require a little change in his attitude toward patients and public, we believe the physicians of St. Louis will do their part and show the way in this great movement.

BAD BREATH

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Get at the Cause and Remove It.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, act gently on the bowels and positively do the work.

People afflicted with bad breath find quick relief through Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The pleasant, sugar-coated tablets are taken for bad breath by all who know them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets act gently but firmly on the bowels and liver, stimulating them to natural action, clearing the blood and gently purifying the entire system. They do that which dangerous calomel does without any of the bad after effects.

All the benefits of nasty, sickening, griping cathartics are derived from Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets without griping, pain or any disagreeable effects.

Dr. F. M. Edwards discovered the formula after seventeen years of practice among patients afflicted with bowel and liver complaint, with the attendant bad breath.

Olive Tablets are purely a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their olive color. Take one or two every night for a week and note the effect. 15c and 30c.

ACIDS IN STOMACH CAUSE INDIGESTION

Create Gas, Sourness and Pain How to Treat.

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as some believe to a lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food sours, causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestants are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or pain. Bisurated Magnesia (in powder or tablet form—never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most efficient form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.

Secret Negotiations in 1914 With Germany and England To Promote Lasting Peace

"The Intimate Papers of Colonel House"

Formal Appeal to Kaiser Made Only Month Before The Great Conflict Started

"Too Late" Was The Reply Sent Back From Berlin

Zimmermann, on Eve of Conflict, Sent Emperor's Thanks to House for Efforts to Secure Friendly Understanding.

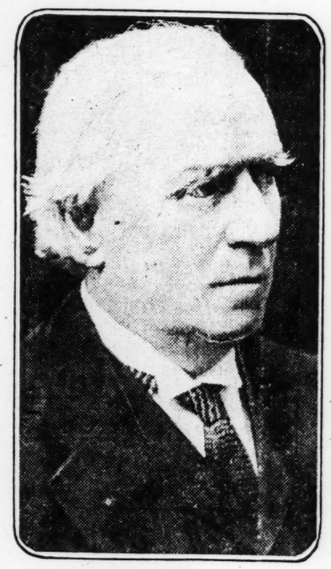
"Each Country Fears the Other," House Reported

Neither Wanted to Be the First to Propose Negotiations, but Both Agreed Something Should Be Done to Prevent War.

Col. House, from a photograph made about the time he was endeavoring to promote world-wide peace.

Dr. Alfred F. M. Zimmermann, Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Germany, in 1914.

"I TOLD of the militant war spirit in Germany and of the high tension of the people, and I feared some spark might be fanned into a blaze. I thought Germany would strike quickly when she moved; that there would be no parley or discussion; that when she felt that a difficulty could not be overcome by peaceful negotiation she would take no chances, but would strike."



Herbert H. Asquith, former Premier of Great Britain.

"THE Emperor took note of its contents with the greatest interest. Alas! all his strong and sincere efforts to conserve peace have entirely failed. I am afraid that Russia's procedure will force the Old World, and especially my country, in the most terrible war! There is no chance now to discuss the possibility of an understanding, so much desired, which would lay the foundation for permanent peace and security."

Viscount Grey, who was Sir Edward Grey at the outbreak of the World War.

"MR. ASQUITH cast the usual slur upon Mr. Bryan. I explained why the President had taken him into his Cabinet. He understood that the President had acted wisely, and yet he considered it extremely unfortunate that the necessity existed. This is the usual comment I hear everywhere—in Germany, in France and here. They do not do Mr. Bryan justice, but it is absolutely useless to fight his battles.

"SIR EDWARD was visibly impressed," recorded Col. House, "and we discussed every phase of the European situation, particularly as it applied to Germany and England. He agreed with me that the French statesmen had given up all idea of revenge and of the recovery of Alsace and Lorraine, and that they would be content with the position of France as it now is. . . ."

Immediately preceding the outbreak of the world war, Col. House undertook a mission to Europe in behalf of an understanding between Germany, England, France and the United States for international peace. In today's installment he tells of the high hopes aroused by his interview with the Kaiser, and of his efforts to gain, the assent of London, only to have the whole plan blasted by the assassination of the Austrian Archduke.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Printed by arrangement with Houghton Mifflin Company and New York Tribune.

COL. House left for Paris in the evening that followed his memorable interview with the Kaiser. He was evidently well pleased with the reception that his plan had met with, for although the Emperor made no promises, he left House with sufficient encouragement to proceed in taking up matters with the British. "I am glad to tell you," he wrote Wilson from Paris, "that I have been as successful as I anticipated. . . . I am very happy over what has been accomplished and I am eager to get to London to see what can be done there. I have a feeling that the soil will be much more fallow.

"I find that both England and Germany," he wrote the President, "have one feeling in common, and that is fear of each other. Neither wants to be the first to propose negotiations, but both are agreed that they should be brought about, though neither desires to make the necessary concessions."

In the meantime President Wilson, whose attitude toward the European situation had originally been not far from indifference, began to appreciate the possibilities of the Great Adventure. He wrote House of the thrill of pleasure he experienced on receiving the Colonel's report and of his confidence that House had begun a great thing and was carrying it through in just the right way with characteristic tact and quietness.

"June 8, 1914—I have spent a quiet week in Paris," recorded House, "my most arduous duty being to dodge Americans and others wanting to see me.

"I called on Ambassador Herrick, it having been understood that I would do so when I was ready to talk with him. Mr. Roosevelt had been with him the day before, and he told me something of T. R.'s mental and physical activities. Herrick made the prediction that T. R. was getting ready to go back home and to give the Democrats a thoroughly unhappy time. I replied that I was sure he could do nothing that would distress us so much as it would his fellow Republicans."

House arrived in London at the height of the season.

On June 17 House, Sir Edward Grey, Sir William Tyrrell and Page had lunch together. The Colonel told of his visit to Germany and his proposition to the Kaiser.

"Sir Edward was visibly impressed," recorded Col. House, "and we discussed every phase of the European situation, particularly as it applied to Germany and England. He agreed with me that the French statesmen had given up all idea of revenge and of the recovery of Alsace and Lorraine, and that they would be content with the position of France as it now is. . . .

Russian Deal Vital to Britain.

"We spoke of the difficulties of bringing about negotiations. I suggested that the Kaiser, he and I meet at Kiel in some way; but this was not gone into further.

"The relations between Russia and the British Empire were talked of freely and with the utmost candor. Sir Edward explained that Great Britain and Russia touched at so many points in the world that it was essential for them to have some sort of good understanding.

"I thought they should permit Germany to aid in the development of Persia. He said it might be a good move to play the one against the other, and yet the Germans were so aggressive it might be dangerous. Sir Edward was very fair concerning the necessity for Germany to maintain a navy commensurate with her commerce and sufficient to protect herself from Russia and France. I told of the militant war spirit in Germany and of the high tension of the people, and I feared some spark might be fanned into a blaze, I thought Germany would strike quickly when she moved; that there would be no parley or discussion; that when she felt that a difficulty could not be overcome by peaceful negotiation she would take no chances, but would strike. I thought the Kaiser himself and most of his immediate advisers did not want war, because they wished Germany to expand commercially and grow in wealth, but the army was militaristic and aggressive and ready for war at any time.

Warning About Aviation.

"I told him there was a feeling in Germany, which I shared, that the time had come when England could protect herself no longer merely because of her isolated position; that modern inventions had so changed conditions that the Germans believed she would be within striking distance before long, just as were her Continental neighbors. Sir Edward replied: 'The idea, then, is that England will be in the same position as the Continental powers.' I said, 'Quite so.'

"I gave my opinion of the German aerial strength and what they might accomplish even now. I explained the part we desired to play as pacificators and why I felt we could do this better than they could do it themselves. I warned him that the present Chancellor of Germany might go at any time and be replaced by Von Tirpitz, and a solution would then be a much more difficult undertaking.

"I feel that my visit has been justified, even if nothing more is done than that already accomplished."

Colonel House to the President

LONDON, June 17, 1914.

Dear Governor:

. . . I found Sir Edward a willing listener and very frank and sympathetic.

I find here everything cluttered up with social affairs, and it is impossible to work quickly. Here they have their thoughts on Ascot, garden parties, etc., etc. In Germany their one thought is to advance industrially and to glorify war. In France I did not find the war spirit dominant. Their statesmen dream no longer of revenge and the recovery of Alsace and Lorraine. The people do, but those that govern and know hope only that France may continue as now. Germany already exceeds her in population by nearly 50 per cent and the disparity increases year by year. It is this new spirit in France which fills me with hope, and which I used today to some advantage. France, I am sure, will welcome our efforts for peace. Your faithful and affectionate,

E. M. HOUSE.

LONDON, June 26, 1914.

Dear Governor:

I had a very interesting luncheon with Sir Edward Grey Wednesday. The other guests were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Crewe and Sir William Tyrrell. Page had to go to Oxford to take his degree and could not be with us. . . .

I gave it as my opinion that international matters could be worked out to advantage in much the same way as individuals would work out private affairs, and I thought that most of the misunderstandings were brought about by false reports and mischief makers, and, if the principals know of the facts, what appeared to be a difficult situation became easy of solution.

I illustrated this by mentioning the service Sir William Tyrrell performed in America last autumn and the consequent cordial relations between our two countries. . . . .

They told me that there was no written agreement between England, France and Russia, and their understanding was one merely of sympathy and the determination to conserve the interests of one another. . . .

Sir Edward was in a most delightful mood and paid you a splendid tribute. At our last meeting he said it was his purpose at the proper time in the House of Commons to say publicly what he thought you had done for international morals. (A reference to the repeal of the Panama tolls exemption.)

I breakfasted with Lloyd George yesterday and had a most interesting conversation with him. I found him peculiarly ill-informed regarding America and its institutions, I will tell you more of this when we meet. . . .

Your faithful and affectionate,

E. M. HOUSE.

LONDON, June 26, 1914.

Dear Governor:

There is another matter I have taken up which I hope may have your approval. I have suggested that America, England, France, Germany and the other money-lending and developing nations have some sort of tentative understanding among themselves for the purpose of establishing a plan by which investors, on the one hand, may be encouraged to lend money at reasonable rates and to develop under favorables terms the waste places of the earth, and, on the other hand, to bring about conditions by which such loans may be reasonably safe.

I suggest that each of these countries should tell its people that in the future usurious interest and concessions which involve the undoing of weak and debt involved countries would no longer be countenanced; that the same rule must hereafter prevail in such investments as is now maintained in all civilized lands in regard to private loans. I brought this matter up at luncheon on Wednesday and Grey, Haldane and Crewe were equally cordial in their discussions of it. I told them I wanted to get their views so that they might be laid before you when I returned.

If this can be brought about it will not only do away with much of the international friction which such things cause, but it will be a step forward toward bringing about a stable and healthful condition in those unhappy countries which are now misgoverned and exploited both at home and abroad.

Your faithful and devoted,

E. M. HOUSE.

Silence Means "Yes."

When Col. House put up a project before President Wilson, he did not expect affirmative commendation. He evidently took the President's silence for consent, for, as he once said, "If the President did not object, I knew that it was safe to go ahead, for he rarely agreed in words; while if he disagreed, he always expressed himself." With House the opposite was true; we find many phrases, in his memoranda, such as "I showed by my silence that I did not agree."

LONDON, July 4, 1914.

My Dear Friend:

. . . Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, Sir William Tyrrell, Walter Page and Thomas Nelson Page, who is now here, took lunch with me yesterday to go into a more detailed discussion. . . .

Tyrrell told me that Sir Edward Grey was deeply interested (in the suggestion) and approved entirely its general purpose, and that you could count upon this Government's cooperation.

It was the general consensus of opinion that a great deal of friction in the future would be obviated if some such understanding could be brought about in this direction, and that it would do as much as any other one thing to insure international amity.

The idea, of course, is based entirely upon your Mobile speech, and it is merely that we are trying to mold something concrete from what you have already announced in general as your policy. I suggested that it would be well to keep the matter absolutely confidential until after I had talked it out with you and you had decided how best to bring all the other Governments into agreement, if at all. I do not think it wise to have it known that England was the first to accept the proposal. . . .

Your faithful and affectionate

E. M. HOUSE.

"July 2, 1914: After the ladies left the table," House recorded, "Asquith asked me to come and sit by him, so that we might talk, which we did earnestly for 15 or 20 minutes. I did nearly all the talking. We first discussed the merits of Cabinet officers sitting in Parliament or Congress, as the case may be. . . . I expressed the feeling that it was better they should have seats and he also was inclined to this view. . . . I felt very much at home in London now, for the reason that his Government was being abused in exactly the same terms and by the same sort of people as were abusing the Wilson administration in the United States. This amused him. I thought the purpose of the Liberal government and of the Democratic party were quite similar; that we were striving for the same end, but if the conservatives of the two countries had their way the end would probably be that many of them would be stripped of their wealth and hanged to lamp posts. He agreed to this.

"Mr. Asquith cast the usual slur upon Mr. Bryan. I explained why the President had taken him into his Cabinet. He understood that the President had acted wisely, and yet he considered it extremely unfortunate that the necessity existed. This is the usual comment I hear everywhere—in Germany, in France and here. They do not do Mr. Bryan justice, but it is absolutely useless to fight his battles because in doing so you discredit the purpose you are striving for."

While House waited for Grey to give some definite word which he might pass on to the Kaiser the spark was struck that ignited the pile of combustible material which the diplomatic conflict of a decade had heaped up. On June 28 the Archduke Franz Ferdinand, heir apparent to the Austro-Hungarian throne, was murdered by a Serb Nationalist in Serajevo, chief city of Bosnia.

The news of the Archduke's assassination reached London at the height of the Irish crisis and the feminist agitation, and it created no more audible effect than a tenor solo in a boiler shop.

Ambassador Gerard to Col. House.

BERLIN, July 7, 1914.

My dear Colonel:

. . . Have been on A.'s yacht at Kiel, and Mrs. Gerard is still there. I came up for our colony celebration of the Fourth of July.

Dined with the Kaiser and lunched with Von Tirpitz before the news of the murder of Franz Ferdinand came. They were both most enthusiastic about you. Von Tirpitz thanked me for giving him the opportunity to meet you. We have about decided to go to the United States, sailing Aug. 12 on the Vaterland—and I shall certainly report to you, wherever you are, before my return.

The Kaiser had asked me to sail on his racing yacht with him at Kiel, but the murder in Bosnia prevented my thus spending a day with him.

Tennis is responsible for this almost illegible handwriting.

When do you sail? . . .

Col. House to the President.

LONDON, July 3, 1914.

My dear Friend:

. . . Tyrrell brought word to me today that Sir Edward Grey would like to convey to the Kaiser the impressions I have obtained from my several discussions with this Government in regard to a better understanding between the nations of Europe, and to try and get a reply before I leave. Sir Edward said he did not wish to send anything official or in writing, for fear of offending French and Russian sensibilities in the event it should become known. He thought it was one of those things that had best be done informally and unofficially. . . .

So you see things are moving in the right direction as rapidly as we could hope. Your

Your faithful and affectionate

E. M. HOUSE.

Col. House to the Kaiser.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
London, July 7, 1914.

His Imperial Majesty, Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia, Berlin, Germany.

Sir: Your imperial majesty will doubtless recall our conversation at Potsdam, and that with the President's consent and approval I came to Europe for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it was possible to bring about a better understanding between the great Powers, to the end that there might be a continuation of peace, and later a beneficent economic readjustment which a lessening of armaments would ensue.

Because of the commanding position your majesty occupies, and because of your well known desire to maintain peace, I came, as your majesty knows, directly to Berlin.

I can never forget the gracious acceptance of the general purpose of my mission, the masterly exposition of the world-wide political conditions as they exist today and the prophetic forecast as to the future which your majesty then made.

I received every reasonable assurance of majesty's cordial approval of the President's purpose, and I left Germany happy in the belief that your majesty's great influence would be thrown in behalf of peace and the broadening of the world commerce.

In France I tried to reach the thoughts of her people in regard to Germany and to find what hopes she nursed. My conclusion upon leaving was that her statesmen have given over all thought of revenge or of recovery of the two lost provinces. Her people, in general, still have hopes in both directions, but her better-informed rulers would be quite content if France could be sure of her autonomy as it now exists.

It was then, sir, that I came to England, and with high hopes, in which I have not been disappointed.

I first approached Sir Edward Grey, and I found him sympathetic to the last degree. After a two hours' conference, we parted with the understanding that we should meet again within a few days. This I inferred to mean that he wished to consult with the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

At our next conference, which again lasted for two hours, he had, to meet me, the Lord Chancellor, Earl Crewe and Sir William Tyrrell. Since then I have met the Prime Minister and practically every important member of the British Government, and I am convinced that they desire such an understanding as will lay the foundation for permanent peace and security.

England must necessarily move cautiously, lest she offend the sensibilities of France and Russia; but, with the changing sentiment in France, there should be a gradual improvement of relations between Germany and that country which England will now be glad to foster.

ENGLISH BECOMES UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE OF THE RIVIERA

Is Heard on All Sides, in the Casinos, Palaces, Streets and Theaters.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Feb. 13.—English has become the universal language of the Riviera. One hears it in the casinos, palaces and promenades, on the street, in theaters, everywhere. It is spoken with the twang of the Yankee, the drawl of the Southern states, the sharp accent of London and here and there the gutteral tones of Scotland.

The residents of the Riviera have become accustomed to the sound of English, but now and then late arrivals from Paris express surprise, and wonder whether this is France or some seaboard series of resorts on the North Sea or the coast of New Jersey. In the Nice Casino recently, four Germans were talking rather loudly in their own language. In a group of French people nearby, the following conversation occurred:

"These Germans are certainly making a lot of noise. I should think they might be more reserved. Somehow this German language gets on my nerves," said one of the women.

A man wearing the Legion of Honor button replied: "Let them alone, it is rather a relief to hear something besides English spoken here, even if it is German."

FRANCE LOSES ON WAR STOCKS

Purchased Military Supplies That Were Left in Country.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Feb. 13.—The purchase of military supplies left in France after the war has turned out a very poor stroke of business for France. The amount France has received by selling these stocks is officially stated to be 3,309,594,000 francs. This figure cannot be regarded as final, as there are still a few sales to be effected and some accounts to be checked.

It is difficult to compare this sum with the price that France undertook to pay, $400,000,000, as the sales have been spread over nearly six years, during which the value of the franc has varied considerably. At the present rate of exchange the receipts represent about $124,890,000. The stocks were paid for in state bonds, dated Aug. 1, 1920, with 5 per cent interest payable half yearly, to be redeemed in 10 years. The interest has been paid regularly.

HONOR "TAY-PAY" O'CONNOR

London Correspondents Serve Luncheon for Veteran Writer.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—T. P. O'Connor, "father of the House of Commons," also is "father" of the corps of American newspaper correspondents in London. At one time or another he has been on the staffs of many of the American journals represented in the British capital long before their present day correspondents were born.

"Tay-Pay" drew upon his remarkable memory for many stories of his 55 years as a London journalist at a recent luncheon of the Correspondents' Association, at which he was the guest of honor. At 77 he is known to his colleagues as the world's champion obituary writer and as a regular contributor to London papers, aside from his work in Parliament. Nobody of importance can die anywhere without "Tay-Pay" penning a kindly column.

WASHINGTON AT SEVENTH

"The Intimate Papers of Col. House"

While much has been accomplished, yet there is something still to be desired in order that there may be a better medium created for an easy and frank exchange of thought and purposes. No one knows better than your majesty of the unusual ferment that is now going on throughout the world, and no one is in so fortunate a position to bring about a sane and reasonable understanding among the statesmen of the Western peoples, to the end that our civilization may continue uninterrupted.

While this communication is, as your majesty knows, quite unofficial, yet it is written in sympathy with the well known views of the President, and, I am given to understand, with the hope from His Brittanic Majesty's Government that it may bring a response from your majesty which may permit another step forward.

Permit me, sir, to conclude by quoting a sentence from a letter which has come to me from the President.

"Your letter from Paris, written just after coming from Berlin, gives me a thrill of deep pleasure. You have, I hope and believe, begun a great thing and I rejoice with all my heart."

I have the honor to be, sir, with the greatest respect, your majesty's very obedient servant.

EDWARD M. HOUSE.

Delayed Too Long.

Thus was a last opportunity given to the Kaiser, who had the assurance of a disinterested outsider that if Germany sincerely desired peace she would have the active assistance of the United States and the co-operation of Great Britain. It was a definite answer to the allegation that Grey's policy aimed at the encirclement and isolation of the Germans. Alas! By the time Col. House's letter reached Germany, Wilhelm II already was on his cruise in Norwegian waters, whence he was recalled by the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia and the war clouds that immediately gathered.

Col. House to the President.

PRIDE'S CROSSING, Mass., July 21, 1914.

Dear Governor:

When I was in Germany it seemed clear to me that the situation, so far as a continuation of peace was concerned was in a very precarious condition; and you will recall my first letter to you telling of the high tension that Germany and southern Europe were under.

I tried to convey this feeling to Sir Edward Grey ang other members of the British Government. They seemed astonished at my pessimistic view and thought that conditions were better than they had been for a long time. While I shook their confidence, at the same time, I did not do it sufficiently to make them feel that quick action was necessary; consequently they let matters drag until after the Kaiser had gone into Norwegian waters for his vacation before giving me any definite word to send to him.

It was my purpose to go back to Germany and see the Emperor, but the conservative delay of Sir Edward and his conferees made that impossible.

The night before I sailed Sir Edward sent me word that he was worried over conditions, but he did not anticipate what has followed. I have a feeling that if a general war is finally averted it will be because of the better feeling that has been brought about between England and Germany. England is exerting a restraining hand upon France and, as far as possible, upon Russia; but her influence with the latter is slight.

Russia has a feeling, so I was told in England, that Germany was trying to protect Austria and German influence deep into the Balkan States in order to check her. She has evidently been preparing for some decisive action since the Kaiser threw several hundred thousand troops on his eastern frontier two years ago, thereby compelling Russia to relinquish the demands she had made in regard to a settlement of Balkan matter. . . .

Your faithful and affectionate E. M. HOUSE.

Uncontrollable Forces.

Pride's Crossing, Mass., Aug. 1, 1914.

Dear Governor—There are one or two things that would perhaps be of interest to you at this time and which I shall tell you now and not wait until I see you.

Sir Edward Grey told me that England had no written agreement with either Russia or France, or any formal alliance; that the situation was brought about by a mutual desire for protection and that they discussed international matters with as much freedom with one another as if they had an actual written alliance. . . .

The great danger is that some overt act may occur which will get the situation out of control. Germany is exceedingly nervous and at high tension, and she knows that her best chance of success is to strike quickly and hard; therefore, her very alarm might cause her to precipitate action as a means of safety.

Please let me suggest that you do not let Mr. Bryan make any overtures to any of the Powers involved. They look upon him as absolutely visionary, and it would lessen the weight of your influence if you desire to use it yourself later. . . . Your faithful and affectionate E. M. HOUSE.

Even as House was writing these letters, the act which he feared took place. Assailed by technical arguments which he could not controvert, the Chancellor was carried away by the military influence and threw up his hands. Germany dispatched to Russia the ultimatum that made war inevitable and flung into Belgium the vanguard of the army designed to conquer France.

Herr Zimmermann to Col. House.

Berlin, Aug. 1, 1914.

My Dear Colonel—I beg to inform you that I laid the letter which you addressed to his majesty the Emeperor from London before his majesty. I am directed to convey to you his majesty's sincere thanks.

The Emperor took note of its contents with the greatest interest. Alas! All his strong and sincere efforts to conserve peace have entirely failed. I am afraid that Russia's procedure will force the Old World and especially my country in the most terrible war! There is no chance now to discuss the possibility of an understanding, so much desired, which would lay the foundation for permanent peace and security!

With assurances of my high regard, I remain, my dear Colonel, sincerely yours,

ZIMMERMANN.

Folly of Armament.

"April 15, 1915: I am often asked my views as to the cause of the war," House wrote, "and, while I never give them, I might as well record them here.

"It is clear to me that the Kaiser did not want war and did not actually expect it. He foolishly permitted Austria to bring about an acute controversy with Serbia, and he concluded that by standing firm with his ally, Russia would do nothing more than make a vigorous protest, much as she did when Austria annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina. The rattling of the scabbard and the shining armor were sufficient in that case, and he thought they would be in this, for the reason that he did not believe Great Britain would go to war concerning such a happening in the Southeast. He had tried England twice in the West and had found that he himself must give way, and there was not much danger of his trying it again where England was involved. But in this instance he thought Germany's relations with England had improved to such an extent that she would not back Russia and France to the extent of making war on Germany.

"And he went so far in what might be termed 'bluff' that it was impossible at the last moment to recede, because the situation had got beyond him. He did not have the foresight to see the consequences, neither did he have the foresight to see that the building up of a great war machine must inevitably lead to war. Germany had been in the hands of a group of militarists and financiers, and it has been to conserve their selfish interests that this terrible situations has been made possible."

Wilson had to meet the political crisis at a moment when he was overwhelmed with domestic trouble, for his wife was at the point of death. "His burdens are heavier than any President's since Lincoln," wrote House to Page on Aug. 6.

Urged by the Senate resolution and against House's judgment, Wilson issued a formal appeal to the belligerents, offering his services in the cause of mediation. But it was, as might have been expected, without effect.

Col. House to the President.

Pride's Crossing, Mass. Aug. 5, 1914.

Dear Governor: . . . If a statement is made, let me suggest that you make it clear that what you have done was at your own instance. If the public either here or in Europe thought that Mr. Bryan instigated it, they would conclude it was done in an impracticable way and was doomed to failure from the start.

I hate to harp upon Mr. Bryan, but you cannot know as I do how he is thought of in this connection. You and I understand better and know that the grossest sort of injustice is done him.

My heart is full of deep appreciation for your letter of Aug. 2. I never worry when I do not hear from you. No human agency could make me doubt your friendship and affection. That my life is devoted entirely to your interests, I believe you know, and I never cease from trying to serve you.

Your faithful and affectionate E. M. HOUSE.

Fear of Victor.

The President's offer of mediation was merely an expression of willingness to act.

A fortnight after this offer President Wilson issued an appeal to the citizens of the republic, requesting their assistance in maintaining a state of neutrality. "It may be easy to excite passion," said the President, "and difficult to allay it. . . . Every man who really loves America will act and speak in the true spirit of neutrality, which is the spirit of impartiality and fairness and friendliness to all concerned."

Col. House to the President:

PRIDE'S CROSSING, Mass. Aug. 22, 1914.

Dear Governor: Thinking that I might see you soon has caused me to hope that I might tell you in person of how splendidly I think you are meeting the difficult situations that come to you day by day.

Your address on neutrality is one of the finest things you have ever done, and it has met with universal approbation. Every day editorials of the Republican press speak of you as if you were of their party instead of being the idol of ours. . . .

The saddest feature of the situation to me is that there is no good outcome to look forward to. If the allies win it means largely the domination of Russia on the continent of Europe; and if Germany wins, it means the unspeakable tyranny of militarism for generations to come. . . .

Germany's success will ultimately mean trouble for us. We will have to abandon the path which you are blazing as a standard for future generations, with permanent peace as its goal and a new international ethical code as its guiding star, and build up a military machine of vast proportions.

Your faithful and affectionate E. M. HOUSE.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked or gray.

Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, for only 75 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because noone can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

88 ILLINOIS FIRMS OPERATE 800 BUSSES

Transportation Service Has Developed Largely in Last Four Years.

By the Associated Press.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 13.—Within 12 years 88 motorbus companies have developed a motorbus system in Illinois with 800 busses and covering more than 2000 miles of hard roads, David S. Mowrey, head of the motorbus department of the Illinois Commerce Commission, said here.

"The first certificates for motorbus companies," he said, "were issued in 1914, and up to Jan. 1, 1922, 18 certificates had been issued, the number issued up to Jan. 1, 1926, being 122. Of this number 82 are operating passenger lines and six operating freight lines, making a total of 88 companies operating. The Chicago Motor Coach Co. is the largest of these, operating 415 busses in the city of Chicago and its suburbs.

"The Egyptian Transportation Co. is also one of the largest companies, which is operating over 218 miles of routes at the present time and has applications pending which, if granted, would extend their lines over 722 miles of routes touching 90 towns and cities in Central and Southern Illinois.

"The 88 authorized companies are operating about 800 busses, covering more than 2000 miles of public highways in Illinois, and carry about 65,000,000 passengers per year. There are also a number of companies operating interstate that are not under any regulations.

Life Underwriters' Luncheon.

The first luncheon meeting of the fiscal year of the Life Underwriters' Association of St. Louis will be held at noon Tuesday in the Chamber of Commerce dining room. Plans for the year will be discussed.

SAYS NOTHING CAN TAKE ITS PLACE

Has Found Herb Juice to Be the Only Remedy to Relieve Him of Constipation, Acid Stomach and Extreme Nervousness.

"There is nothing that can ever take the place of Herb Juice in my estimation. Because I was almost a living skeleton, suffering from constipation, stomach trouble in the very worst form and was extremely nervous, had been living on a diet for a long time and was constantly losing in weight and had gotten to the point where it was almost impossible for me to navigate, but since taking Herb Juice for some time I have gained 20 lbs. in weight and have been restored to normal health after I had given up practically all hope of ever seeing another well day," said Mr. Frank G. Haenni, who resides at 216 South Meramec St., Clayton, Mo., St. Louis County, when he called to personally express his gratitude to the Herb Juice man only a few days ago.

MR. FRANK G. HAENNI

Continuing, Mr. Haenni said: "I think practically all my stomach trouble was caused from a surplus amount of acid. After eating I would bloat very badly, causing a very tight, uncomfortable feeling and pains in my chest and stomach, and I was extremely nervous. It seems that the acid from my stomach got into my blood and through my whole system, causing it breaking out on my hands and arms which I was told was from too much acid. This breaking out which I speak of was very terrifying. I could not sleep at night for the itching. I was also dreadfully constipated and had been for years. I tried all kinds of medicines and remedies which were recommended to me and that I could read about, but with no results whatsoever. I tried living on a diet, eating very carefully and a very small portion of any kind of food, but this, like everything else, seemed to fail. I kept losing in weight and dwindling down until I was a mere skeleton. At last one day a friend of mine insisted that I try Herb Juice and said it would give me relief. I went straight and bought a bottle and started taking it. The first bottle showed such an improvement that I continued taking it and after taking several bottles I can truthfully say that beyond a question of a doubt Herb Juice has done more for me than everything else I have ever used. It seems to have purified my whole system because my hands and arms are now free from any irritation; the acid stomach and gas have disappeared; I eat heartily of anything I want and sleep just like a baby. The constipation has also been relieved and I have gained 24 pounds in weight and feel and look like an entirely different person. I give Herb Juice credit for all of this and truly believe that had it not been for this wonderful medicine that I would never have been able to enjoy my present state of good health and I intend to always have a bottle with me. Not only do I indorse this great medicine, but I urge all sufferers from stomach trouble, constipation, nervousness, etc., to try it on my recommendation and I am quite sure they will enjoy the same pleasant results I have."

Herb Juice is the biggest selling medicine on the market where it is known. Hundreds are calling daily to see the Herb Juice man at Walgreen Drug Co., 514 Washington Ave., giving statements for publication and praising Herb Juice that their friends may be induced to try the great remedy which is relieving many sufferers in St. Louis.

BOY SCOUT TROOP DEDICATES CABIN

Parents and Guests of Members at Ceremony Near Manchester.

After completing a winter's work in building a troop cabin near Manchester, Mo., Troop 21, of the Ethical Society, 3646 Washington boulevard, held a formal dedication of the camp recently, with parents of the troop as guests. At 3 p. m. the American flags and the troop flag were raised, and scouting demonstrations and drills were given by the troop. Troop Committee Chairman Hermann Schwarz, who secured the site, made the dedication speech.

In the evening the scouts cooked a meal of hunters' stew, biscuit-twist, and chocolate over an open fire, for the parents. A council fire was built, and songs and stunts were given. Joe Friday, a full-blooded Ojibway Indian, who is visiting St. Louis, told Indian stories and of his experiences as a guide in Canada.

The cabin was begun last fall, after a farmer, George Koebel, had given the use of a piece of woodland. The entire construction was done by the Scouts.

Headquarters.

Headquarters reports a large number of out-of-town visitors last week for the circus, which was attended by Scout leaders from all parts of the country. These included Associate Chief Scout Executive George Fisher, of National Headquarters, New York; Regional Scout Executives Davis of Omaha, Neb., and Nichols of Philadelphia, and Commissioner Tillotson of Colorado Springs, who assisted in the circus. Mr. Nichols took notes to aid Philadelphia in staging a similar event later in the year.

Ralph Hubbard will leave tomorrow for his home in Colorado Springs, after a four weeks' stay in St. Louis. He is taking with him his collection of Indian costumes, valued at $12,000. Mr. Hubbard coached the scouts who took part in the Indian dances given at the circus. He has tentatively promised to visit the camp at Irondale for one section this summer.

Associate Chief Scout Executive Fisher was the principal speaker at the annual meeting of the St. Louncil Council last week, at the Missouri Athletic Association.

Field Executives John Wright of the North District, and Samuel Reaves of the West District have gone to New York for a special course in scout instruction at Columbia University, and the National Training Center of the Boy Scouts at Scarborough - on-the - Hudson. They will return in a month.

According to Headquarters, much credit for the showing made by Merit Badge scouts during the roundup, is due Deputy Commissioner Aubrey C. Lindsley, of the West District. He has examined as many as 21 scouts for merit badges in one evening, which he claims to be a record. He also examined first-class scouts during the roundup.

Commodore Flint, swimming instructor of the St. Louis Council, taught approximately 500 scouts to swim 50 yards last month. Headquarters considers this a noteworthy accomplishment, the more so as it was accomplished in winter.

Headquarters announces that apparently only those scouts becoming members of the Campers' Saving Club will be able to attend camp this summer, as the club membership already nearly equals the accommodations of the camp. Now that the roundup and circus activities are over preparations for camp and work on the camp program and activities are beginning.

North District.

Twenty-one North District troops filled their quota in the Achievement Roundup, and have received steamers for their troop flags as rewards.

Headquarters has announced the permanent organization of the North District under the following Deputy Commissioners: Region 1, J. P. Simons; Region 2, Willis Ehrhardt; Region 3, Ralph Meyers; Region 4, Harry C. Noe; Region 5, Nathan Wolff; Region 6, G. W. Harris; Region 7, W. L. Warner; Region 8, Henry F. Weis; Region 9, Gene Dohrendorf; Region 10, Leonard Jaeger; Region 11, Harry Pilgrim; Region 12, Ray H. Geiser; Special Assistant Deputy Commissioner, William Windhorst.

After the Patrons' Association of the Benton School had announced that they would sponsor Troop 29, the troop made a special effort and without a scoutmaster put over their quota in the Achievement Roundup.

Troop 42 of the Zion Lutheran Church has helped organize two new troops from Lutheran churches.

Field Executive Wright spoke before the congregation of St. John's Evangelical Church last Sunday morning under the auspices of Troop 99 of the church. His subject was "Scouting and the Sunday School."

In addition to making their quota in the achievement roundup, and receiving the commissioner's award at the circus, Troop 151 secured subscriptions to Boys' Life for the members of the new troops they helped to organize.

Girl Scouts Learning to Care for Sick

Part of Girl Scout class in Home Hygiene and the Care of the Sick, with Supervisor Maud Allendar of the Visiting Nurses Association, the instructor.

Scout headquarters expressed appreciation to the deputy commissioners of the north district for their efficient work during the roundup. Every commissioner gave most of his evenings visiting troops, helping them to attain their quota.

The north district last week officially welcomed two new troops, 238, at the Jennings School, and 242, at the Cote Brilliante School. Both troops are sponsored by the Patrons' Associations of their respective schools.

South District.

Three new troops registered in the South District last week. They are Troop 100 of the Peabody School, with 10 scouts and K. W. Welker as scoutmaster; Troop 249, at the Sunshine Mission, 16 scouts, Irving L. Spencer scoutmaster; and Troop 250, at the Shepherd School, eight scouts, V. H. Miller scoutmaster. Troop 249 is sponsored by the Mothers' Club of Troop 38, and Troop 250 by the Patrons' Association of the school; 250 was organized with the aid of Troop 141. Scoutmaster Thompson and several scouts from 141 conducted the program for the first meeting last Wednesday.

Norman Broadwell and Don Scobie have been appointed patrol leaders in Troop 86. The Clark patrol, although organized only a few weeks, has challenged the other patrols of the troop to a contest for the best patrol.

Troop 76 is leading the city in the number of Boys' Life subscriptions, and first-class and merit badges passed in on troop. It has 32 subscriptions, 22 scouts passed 63 merit badges and nine qualified for the first-class award. This troop also secured 12 mavericks, or recruits, for the roundup.

Scoutmaster See of Troop 125, being called out of the city, Scoutmaster Lang of Troop 4 conducted 123's meeting last week.

Senior Patrol Leader Jones of Troop 143 has been promoted to junior assistant scoutmaster. Plans have been made for the Troop Committee to hold a conference with the patrol leaders in the near future.

Suburban District.

Troop 1, of Pacific, the most outlying troop under the St. Louis Council, attended the circus, spending the two nights at the Railroad Y. M. C. A.

Troop 1, of Overland, under Scoutmaster George A. Newcomb, was the first troop in the suburban district to complete its roundup quota.

Troop 4, Kirkwood, has already doubled its original membership. The troop was organized two weeks ago.

Troop 5, although badly handicapped by the absence of Scoutmaster J. H. Bell, who has been ill for three weeks, took part in three events in the circus.

Owen Williams has become assistant Scoutmaster of Troop 8, Webster Groves, the largest troop in the Webster district. Mr. Williams is a scout of several years' experience.

In preparation for its tenth registration next month, Troop 3, Webster Groves, adopted a six-months' objective Thursday night, reorganized its patrols and initiated a series of interpatrol and individual contests. Earl Peters was appointed patrol leader of the Panther patrol. George Vahrenkamp of the Wolf, George Harris of the Eagle, and Russell Reden of the Raven patrol. Patrol drill was won by the Panthers, and a game by the Eagles, both patrols receiving prizes. A program for the next year is being worked out by Scoutmaster Smith and Assistant Scoutmasters Pettingill and Roberts.

West District.

Scout headquarters announces the commissioning of Ben Smith, an Eagle Scout from Augusta, Fla., as scoutmaster of Troop 20. He will be assisted by Troop Committee Chairman Robert Nash and Assistant Scoutmasters Knapp and Woerheide.

Upon Troop 78 having recently secured Schuyler Green for a scoutmaster, the Legion Post sponsoring the troop promised to furnish a troop committee.

Troop 210, reorganized recently under Scoutmaster John Duggan, Father Dalton of the troop's church, is a scouting enthusiast, and has promised the scoutmaster all possible co-operation.

ICE CREAM POPULAR IN LONDON

American Sodas Replace Tea in Dance Halls.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—American ice cream sodas have replaced tea as the popular drink at the larger London dance halls, where the sale of alcohol as beverage is not permitted.

"White coffee," about half hot milk and coffee, served in tall glasses, is second on the list for popularity at the soft drink dance halls where tea, since ice cream was introduced, has been pushed down to the bottom of the menu. Waiters say jazz and tea, for some reason, don't go well together. At the Covent Garden Opera House, which has been turned into an immense dance hall for the winter and has a license to sell alcoholic drinks, beer is the most popular beverage, with scotch and soda next and ice cream soda as the third in demand.

GIRL SCOUTS ASSIST IN MAKING OF MAP

Nationality Chart to Show Districts Occupied by Different Foreign Groups.

Five girls, members of a Girl Scout class in practical citizenship, are putting their training into practice by assisting the International Institute, a service bureau for foreigners, in making a nationality map of St. oLuis. To date each has given 16 hours' work.

The map will show by different colors those parts of the city occupied by different foreign groups, and the movement of these from one district to another as their conditions are bettered.

The girls are: Sylvia Cohen, Troop 22; Evelyn Grosly, 22; Annette Rubin, 26; Anna Katz, 26, and Dorothy Ferguson, Troop 2, Webster.

Field Capt. Mary Clark of Girl Scout headquarters taught new songs and dances to Troop 9 at their last meeting.

Troops 35 and 44 visited the Fire Department headquarters last Monday, where they learned how alarms were received, and were shown the different fire apparatus.

At an election or Troop 35, Rose Lesenay was chosen patrol leader of the Honor Scouts, and Beatrice Goldstein of the Junior Loyal patrol. Florence Silverberg was elected scribe. This troop is practicting an Irish lilt, to dance at the pageant next April.

A new troop, 55, was organized Feb. 3 at the Clifton Heights Presbyterian Church, seven girls receiving their pins. The captain, Miss Helen Taylor, also was given her pin by Capt. Margaret Taylor of Troop 15. Florence Anderson was elected patrol leader of patrol 1, and Hazel Eaton leader of patrol 2.

A class in Girl Scout leadership is being conducted by Commissioner Eleanor Piper at the Red Cross House at Jefferson Barracks for the wives of soldiers stationed there. The class, which meets every Monday, has 14 members. Last Monday was devoted to learning various knots and their uses.

According to a letter received Thursday by headquarters, the women are enthusiastic about the Girl Scout movement, and several have signified their intention of starting troops at whatever army post they are transferred to next. The writer of the letter is leaving for the Philippines shortly.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and you see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

EXCRUCIATING PAINS— CAUSED BY HEADACHES

"Every member of our family uses Black-Draught," says Mrs. L. B. Mayhew, of Stanley, N. C. "I could not have raised my children without it. It has been used by me for 15 or 35 years.

"For a long time I suffered with bad sick headaches. I would have an excruciating pain across my temples and in my forehead and nothing would give me relief. I would just have to take to my bed and have to wear the pain out, which left me exhausted. This went on for a long time. I tried different medicines, but with no apparent results, as the headaches would return and the intense suffering had to be gone through with again.

"Finally, one day I read about Thedford's Black-Draught. I thought I might try it, as it sounded simple. I began to take it as a tea. Whenever I felt myself getting constipated, I would get a box and take several doses. I found that this prevented the severe headaches which had been troubling me. Now I take Black-Draught before the headaches come on and I find it prevents them altogether.

"I have given Black-Draught to my children for constipation and upset stomach. Often they get upset from careless eating, grow bilious and have a bad breath. I take down the Black-Draught box at once and give a dose to them.

"I am glad to recommend Thedford's Black-Draught as an excellent bowel and liver medicine. I give it to my children and I take it myself for inactive liver."

Most headaches are due to self-poisoning, and when this self-poisoning is caused by an inactive liver, Black-Draught will be found of great value in carrying away the poisons. Sold everywhere.

Home-made Remedy Stops Cough Quickly

Finest cough medicine you ever used. Family supply easily made. Saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Pour 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply— but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for healing the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Watch for Circulation When Burning Oil

You've got to have good circulation in your boiler to succeed with oil. This is true both for the inside and the outside of your boiler. And this statement goes—100 per cent.

Ask the Man Who Knows His Oil! Lend him both your ears, and don't discount his answers. He will tell you that oil must circulate through the piping system to reach the boiler. Then the atomized fog must circulate so as to mix with the right amount of air.

At the time of ignition, the gases must mingle and circulate around the refractory lining before combustion can be completed in the firebox. And lastly, circulation inside the boiler must be rapid if you want all the steam the burning oil should make.

To burn oil efficiently, without letting most of the heat escape up the chimney, takes a well-designed boiler with a proper-size firebox to insure complete combustion. Not only that, but it also has the proper heating surface so that the products of combustion, or hot gases, can quickly impart their intense heat to the water in the boiler.

A Kewanee Smokeless Steel (riveted) Boiler not only has this necessary firebox space and heating surface so arranged as to extract the most of the heat from the gases, but it has one feature which distinguishes it from every ordinary boiler. Here's where circulation heads in at. Now, the water tube grate and header is built into Kewanee Smokeless Boilers in the high temperature zone of the firebox directly above the oil burner. The pumping action furnished by the rapid formation of steam in these tubes causes forced circulation of the whole large water content of the boiler, and helped by the large waterways, this circulation sweeps the steam bubbles from the heating surfaces and thus maintains the most effective condition for the transfer of heat.

Ask our local representatives, or write to the factory direct if you wish, for records of Kewanee Smokeless Firebox Boilers burning oil. It pays you golden dollars to be thoroughly informed.

The Clarks of Clarksdale and the Kinship That Is Claimed With Copper King Clark

How Belief Grew That Multimillionaire Was the Billy Clark Who Deserted His Family

Three Daughters of the Clarksdale Clark Who Ran Away Are Seeking a Share of the $50,000,000 Estate Left by Senator Clark, and There Is a Strange Parallelism That Lends Strength to Their Claim, but There Also Are Serious Discrepancies, and It Remains for a Jury to Say Whether There Were Two Clarks or One.

By F. A. BEHYMER,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

CLARKSDALE, Mo., Feb. 13.

HERE was a man named Clark who made millions in Montana copper mines and fought his way to the United States Sen ate, and died, leaving a vast estate, and there was a man named Clark who was one of the Clarks of Clarksdale, and lived here long ago and went away.

Now, in a suit that has been filed at Butte, Mont., it is set forth that the William A. Clark who won wealth in the mines and a place in the nation's halls, and left $50,000,000 when he died, was the same William A. Clark who, more than half a century ago, was false to his wife and heedless of his children's needs, left Clarksdale and never returned. Wherefore, now, these children ask that delayed justice be done. Wherefore, now, the Clarks of Clarksdale come to the world's attention.

The Clarks of Clarksdale were Leander and Wilson and John and Joe—and William. They were pioneering men who came out of the East, from Indiana, close after the Civil War, to North Missouri, where pioneering men were needed, and settled in De Kalb County, and wrought well and when the railroad came a town that grew where their farms had been was named Clarksdale in their honor.

It was honor well bestowed, for the Clarks, Leander and Wilson and John and Joe, were outstanding men among their neighbors. They lived their lives and passed away, leaving worthy descendants, the present Clarks of Clarksdale, and a worthy heritage.

It was honor, though, which William A. Clark did not stay to share. There was hardness of heart in his going away, for he left his wife and three small daughters with less than enough to save them from want. Bad enough, at that, even if, as might have been, the going away of another woman at near the same time was only a coincidence.

For the present purpose the story of the Clarks begins with their coming to De Kalb County, whenever it was, for there is no dispute about their coming. Back of their coming is dispute enough, which goes to the question of whether this William A. Clark, known for a few years to De Kalb County as Billy Clark, was the person who in after years was Senator Clark of Montana, multimillionaire.

There is strange parallelism if there were two William Clarks, and serious discrepancies in the history if there was only one, which the full service of lawyers and courts will be needed to clear, and which this narrative has no wise attempts to do. For Mrs. Amanda Cotrell of Amity, Mo., sister of the Clark brothers of Clarksdale, says Billy was born in Indiana in 1846 and came with his brothers to De Kalb County in 1865, while the biographers of Senator Clark say he was born in Pennsylvania in 1839, and studied law at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and then came to Leavenworth and taught school in Cooper and adjoining counties in 1859 and 1860.

Old Timers Remember Billy

The guardians of the record the story of the Clarks of Clarksdale proves, to this much can be said, that there was no decoration them a William A. Clark, better known in the old room Billy, who came with them out of Indiana with scant equipment and he taught school in De Kalb County from the late 60s and the early 70s. Old timers who sun themselves on warm winter days in front of Clarksdale emporiums will tell you that.

Ira Farris will tell you so, and he ought to know, for he went to school his first term to Billy Clark at the old Carroll School, five miles northwest of Clarksdale. The teacher, when the weather was too bad to go home, boarded with the Farrises, which fact young Ira felt, as he now recalls, conferred upon him a distinction which other pupils could not claim.

He doesn't remember the year, but he is 62 now and he guesses he started to school at 6, so that would make it 56 years ago.

Billy was a "toggy" fellow, as Ira remembers him, dressing neatly, content with a mustache but affecting the whiskers and flowing hair which in later years made Senator Clark a marked man among men.

And Bob Martin, who is 74, remembers when Billy taught the Silver school, east of town, and Henry Gordon says he also taught the Dean and Thornton schools.

All the time that he was teaching in the winter he was farming in the summer, and Henry Gordon, when he came back from Kansas in 1872, worked four months for him on the farm.

John Clark, not long after the Clarks came, had married Lavina Brooks of Third Fork, and in 1869 William A. Clark, brother of John, married Catherine, sister of Lavina. They say around here that Kate Brooks was a beauty when Billy Clark married her and it may readily be believed, for there is character and wholesome comeliness still in the crayon portrait that hangs in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alma Hines, at Orrick, and it was made from a photograph taken long years afterward, when hardship and sorrow had done their worst.

School teacher and farmer before his marriage, Clark continued teaching and farming after his marriage until, with the help of his brothers, he bought a little drug store at Stewartsville and conducted it, living there, part of the time in rooms above the store and part of the time in a house across the street.

Kind to Ira Farris

Ira Farris never forgot that Billy Clark, when he was teacher at Carroll School, stayed at their house, and whenever he saw Bill he renewed the acquaintance with a solemnity which the importance of the relationship justified. After Billy was a druggist at Stewartsville, Ira never went to Stewartsville without calling at the drug store and paying his respects.

The winter night that Ira, then 10 years old, rode to Stewartsville to meet his Uncle Bright Robinson, who was coming from the East, he tied his horse and the one he had led, for his uncle to ride on the return trip, at the hitching rack, and went to Billy Clark's store to wait for the train. It was due at 8 o'clock, but a blizzard was raging and the train did not come.

"I guess I'll be going home," said Ira.

"You can't go," said Billy Clark. "You'll get lost in the storm and freeze to death."

"The folks will be worried," said Ira.

"Never mind," said Billy. "We'll put the horses in the livery barn and you will stay with me."

The horses were put up and they went to Billy's home and Ira says he can see, in memory, as clearly as if it had been yesterday, the three little Clark girls lying asleep on their trundle bed.

"I don't know," he says, "whether Senator Clark was Billy, but he was good to me that night and I've always been grateful to him."

It was in the following August that Mrs. Clark took the three little girls one day to visit their Aunt Lavina at Maysville. It was after dark when they returned and as they stepped from the train Mrs. Clark noticed that the store and house were dark, and wondered. Billy wasn't there. Ben Clark, his nephew, said he had gone away during the day and had left the keys with him, not telling him where he was going.

Dead to His Wife

There were things which Mrs. Clark, in her pride, had kept to herself. There was another woman for whom Billy had shown an infatuation which she hoped would pass. But now she knew that he would not return. Especially when she learned, as she feared, that the other woman had gone away too. She cried all that night, and the children, when they asked for their father, and she could not tell them when they would see him again, cried with her.

The next day she faced the world of Stewartsville with all the pride that she could summon, fighting back the tears, turning a face of composure to the friends who came, sending them away chilled, with their words of sympathy unspoken.

Her father came and took her and the children home with him and they stayed there until she could cast about and find a way to support them, and then she returned with them to Clarksdale, toiling for them with utter devotion at whatever her hands could find to do.

Sometimes, at first, they asked where their father was and when he would return. Her only answer was that he had gone away. As they grew older and could better understand, they ceased asking. Nobody else ever had the temerity to speak to her about the father of her children, who had sinned against them by turning from their mother to another woman.

The drug business was disposed of by Joe Clark, but if it brought anything more than was needed to meet Billy's obligations, Kate Clark received no part of the proceeds for the care of her children, and so great was her pride and so great the humiliation she had suffered at the hands of her husband, it may be doubted whether she would have accepted anything even if it had been offered.

She believed, and others believed, that Joe Clark was in communication with Billy, but she made no inquiry. It was not a matter that interested her. Billy Clark had been definitely and finally put out of her life. She never wanted to see him again or hear from him. To her he was as one dead and not only dead but one who had forfeited the right to have his memory cherished.

Word did come, after a few years, that he was in Montana. Ira Farris' father was out there and he wrote from Helena that he had seen Billy Clark and he was "doing well." Kate Clark heard it, but she said nothing.

And then, one day in 1890 or 1891, Grant Brown and his brother Frank were at Cascade, Mont., and the town was filled that day with cowmen who had ridden in from the ranges to hear the Hon. William A. Clark make a speech on the issues of the day, with particular reference to the candidacy of O'Toole for Governor. And the Browns, remembering the William A. Clark who had gone from Clarksdale, went to look and listen. They had been young when William A. Clark left Clarksdale, and their recollection of him was dim, but they agreed that this Hon. William A. Clark looked like the Clarks of Clarksdale.

This and other information came trickling from Montana, from time to time, and the conviction grew, among those who had known Billy Clark, that he was this William A. Clark who was becoming a big man out there.

Clark of Montana had then become a national figure. He ran for United States Senator in 1890 and claimed election but was not seated and ran again in 1898 and was seated, but resigned while a contest was pending, only to be elected Senator by the Montana legislature in 1901.

So, when the Democratic National convention was held in Kansas City in 1900, Clark of Montana was there with a brass band to herald his presence. It was a daring thing to do, if he was Billy Clark of the Clarksdale Clarks, but Clark of Montana was always doing daring things. There were De Kalb County men at that convention and they looked with narrowed eyes at this whiskered leader of men who came down from Montana with a brass band, and drew aside and talked it over, and some said this Clark looked mightily like their Billy Clark and others had their doubts.

It came, though, to the ears of Kate Clark that this mighty man of Montana who was called Senator Clark and had so much money was the Billy Clark who had gone away and left her and the children destitute. There was a story about it published in a newspaper wherein his political enemies charged that the Montana man had deserted his family in Missouri. Somebody sent Kate Clark a copy of the paper. She cried over it and then burned it.

Her daughters, grown to womanhood, heard about it. If this man, honored among men, was their father, their mother should do something about it. Kate Clark listened then, for her daughters were no longer children and could not be put off with an evasive word, but she was unmoved. This man, she told them, if he was their father, was an unnatural father and had no love for them. He had married another woman and had other children. There was no use of appealing to him. He was rich and powerful. They could not fight him. No, there was nothing to be done.

Three years ago Kate Clark died and was mourned by her children and grandchildren and was buried in Clarksdale cemetery and the people of Clarksdale, always hindered by Kate Clark's pride from speaking their sympathy, could speak it now to Kate Clark's daughters.

Daughters Take Action

Women past middle life now, these daughters of Kate Clark, who were trundle-bed children when Billy Clark went away—Mrs. Effie McWilliams of Clarksdale, a widow and a grandmother; Mrs. Addie Miller of Denver, also a widow, and Mrs. Alma Hines, wife of Oliver Hines of Orrick, Mo.

Friends could talk to them as they had not been able to talk to Kate Clark. There was more discussion about the now aged rich man of Montana than there had been while their mother lived. A conviction grew that they owed it to themselves and their children, not less than to the memory of their mother, to call this man, if he was their father, to an accounting. The proofs, such proofs as they had, were weighed, and it seemed to them that there was substantial ground for the belief that William A. Clark, multimillionaire, was the Billy Clark who had left them penniless in the long ago.

They were advised, though, that there was nothing that they could do while Clark lived. They could not compel him to right the wrong that he had done their mother and them. It would only be after his death that they could hope for restitution. So they waited.

Last March Clark died and when his will was filed for probate it was found that he had made no mention of Kate Clark's children. If they are his children he could have insured a continuance of his nonprovision for

Lincoln Ellsworth's Own Story of Airplane Flight With Amundsen in Attempt to Reach North Pole

Spitzbergen Selected for Start Because It Is Ideal Spot to Serve as a Polar Base.

AWAY ON SCHEDULE ON MAY 21, 1925

600-Mile Trip Made Into the Unknown With Days of Perils and Hardships Following.

THE most unique figure in the field of Polar exploration today is Lincoln Ellsworth, youngest of all the Polar region explorers, co-partner of Capt. Roald Amundsen on the first Polar flight and on the coming Amundsen-Ellsworth transpolar flight scheduled for May.

Just why this young American with millions of dollars, a villa in Italy, a castle in Spain, an estate in New York—yes, with means at his disposal to do almost anything on earth that he wishes, should choose to take an airplane and fly away to the North Pole, into a cold, bleak region of ice and snow and seeming endless void, cut off from every vestige of civilization and with a gambling chance of ever getting back again is best answered by seeing Lincoln Ellsworth himself.

After talking with the young American explorer, convinced that it was no mere whim of fancy or surface curiosity that prompts him to such adventure, but his exceedingly great love of scientific truth, the search for which though it takes him into fierce and hazardous elements of nature, he prefers any day to a life of ease which his money could buy.

In his own words, "It is the harmonious adjustment of oneself to nature that makes the search after eternal truth always so worth while in whatever field of exploration one elects to labor. They all lead to the same goal—a better understanding of the laws that govern the universe."

The following is the first of four chapters, written by Mr. Ellsworth himself, telling details of the Polar expedition last year with Roald Amundsen.

By LINCOLN ELLSWORTH

THE Island of Spitzbergen, lying just half way between Norway and the North Pole, is ideally situated to serve as a base for polar exploration. Besides its nearness to the pole—10 degrees, or 600 nautical miles — a warm current, an offshoot of the Gulf Stream, follows along the western and southern coasts at the highest latitude in the world. These were the principal reasons which prompted Capt. Amundsen and myself to choose Spitzbergen as a base for our airplane flight to the pole.

We wanted to be on the ground early in the spring and to make our flight before the summer fogs should enshroud the polar pack and hide from view any possible landing place beneath us, for it was our intention to descend at the pole for observations. From April 19 to Aug. 24 (127 days) the sun never sets in the latitude of Kings Bay, Spitzbergen, where we had established our base. Here one may find growing during the long summer days 110 distinct species of flowering plants and grasses. But from Oct. 26 to Feb. 17 is another story; the long Arctic winter is at hand and the sun never shows above the horizon.

Many houses have been built along the Spitzbergen coast during the last 20 years by mining companies who annually ship about 300,000 tons of coal, and Kings Bay boasts of being the most northerly habitation in the world.

May 21, 1925, was the day we had long awaited, when, with our two Dornier-Wal flying boats, we were ready to take off from the ice at Kings Bay to start into the Unknown. We were carrying 7800 pounds of dead weight in each plane. As this was 1200 pounds above the estimated maximum lift, we were compelled to leave behind our radio equipment, which would mean an additional 300 pounds. Our provisions were sufficient to last one month, at the rate of two pounds per day per man. The daily ration list per man is: Pemmican, 400 grams; milk chocolate, 250 grams; oatmeal biscuits, 125 grams; powdered milk, 100 grams, and malted milk tablets, 125 grams.

Taking Off for the Ice.

At 4:15 p. m. all was ready for the start. The 450-h. p. Rolls-Royce motors were turned over for warming up. At 5 o'clock the full horsepower was turned on. We moved. The N-25 had Capt. Amundsen as navigator. Riiser-Larsen was his pilot, and Feucht mechanic. I was navigator of N-24, with Dietrichsen for pilot, and Ohdahl my mechanic. Six men in all.

The first two hours of our flight, after leaving Amsterdam Island, we ran into a heavy bank of fog and rose 1000 meters to clear it. This ascent was glorified by as beautiful a natural phenomenon as I have ever seen. Looking down into the mist, we saw a double halo, in the middle of which the sun cast a perfect shadow of our plane, evanescent and phantom-like. These two multicolored halos beckoned us enticingly into the Unknown. I recalled the ancient legend which says the rainbow is a token that men shall not perish by water.

The fog lasted until midway between latitude 82 and 83. Through rifts in the mist we caught glimpses of the open sea. This lasted for an hour; then, after another hour, the ocean showed strewn with small ice-floes, which indicated the fringe of the polar pack. Then, to quote Capt. Amundsen, "suddenly the mist disappeared and the entire panorama of polar ice stretched away before our eyes—the most spectacular sheet of snow and ice ever seen by man from an aerial perspective."

From our altitude we could see 60 or 70 miles in any direction. The far-flung expanse was strikingly beautiful in its simplicity. There was nothing to break the deadly monotony of snow and ice but a network of narrow cracks, or leads, which scarred this white surface and was the only indication to an observer in the air of the ceaseless movement of the polar pack. We had crossed the threshold into the Unknown!

Into Unknown Space.

I was thrilled at the thought that never before had man lost himself with such speed—75 miles an hour—into unknown space. The silence of ages was now being broken for the first time by the roar of our motors. We were but gnats in an immense void. We had lost all contact with civilization. Time and distance suddenly seemed to count for nothing. What lay ahead was all that matttred now.

"Something hidden. Go and find it. Go and look behind the ranges—
Something lost behind the ranges,
Lost and waiting for you. Go!"

On we sped for eight hours, till the sun had shifted from the west to a point directly ahead of us. By all rights we should now be at the Pole, for our dead-reckoning showed that we had traveltd just 1000 kilometers(600 miles) at 75 miles an hour, but shortly after leaving Amsterdam Island we had run into a heavy northeast wind, which had been steadily driving us westward. Our fuel supply was now about half exhausted, and at this juncture, strangely enough, just ahead of us was the first open lead of water, large enough for an airplane to land, that we encountered on our whole journey north. There was nothing left now but to descend for observations to learn where we were. As Capt. Amundsen's plane began to circle for a landing, his rear motor backfired and stopped, so that he finally disappeared among a lot of ice hummocks with only one motor going.

A Difficult Landing.

This was at 1 a. m. on the morning of May 22. The lead ran east and west, meeting our course at right angles. It was an awful-looking hole. We circled for about 10 minutes, looking for enough open water for a descent. The lead was choked up with a chaotic mass of ice-floats, and it looked as if someone had started to dynamite the ice-floes, and it looked as is someedge or piled high on top of one another, hummocks and pressure ridges, were all that greeted our eyes. It was like trying to land in the Grand Canyon.

We came down in a little lagoon among the ice-floes, taxied over to a huge ice-cake, and, anchoring our plane to it, jumped out with our sextant and artificial horizon. Not knowing what to expect, I carried my rifle, but after our long flight I was a bit unsteady on my legs, tumbled down into the deep snow, and choked up the barrel. Our eyes were bloodshot, and we were almost stone-deaf, after listening to the unceasing roar of our motors for eight hours, and the stillness seemed intensified.

Looking around on landing, I had the feeling that nothing but death could be at home in this part of the world and that there could not possibly be any life in such an environment, and then I was surprised to see a seal pop up his head beside the plane. I am sure he was as surprised as we were, for he raised himself half out of the water to inspect us and seemed not at all afraid to approach; he came almost up to us. We had no thought of taking his life, for we expected, after our observation, to be on our way again toward the Pole. His curiosity satisfied, he disappeared, and we never saw another sign of life in those waters during our entire stay in the ice.

Getting Our Bearings.

Our observations showed that we had come down in Lat. 87 degrees 44' N., long. 10 degrees 20' W. As our flight meridian was 12 degrees E, we were therefore, 22 degrees 20' off our course. This westerly drift had cost us nearly a degree in latitude and enough extra fuel to have carried us to the pole. As it was, we were just 136 nautical miles from it. At the altitude at which we had been flying just before descending, our visible horizon was 46 miles, which means that we had been able to see ahead as far as Lat. 88 degrees 30' N., or to within just 90 miles of the North Pole. We had left civilization, and only eight hours later we were able to view the earth within 90 miles of the goal that it had taken Peary 23 years to reach. Truly, "the efforts of one generation may become the commonplace of the next."

When we had finished taking our observation, we began to wonder where the N-25 was. We crawled up on all the high hummocks nearby and with our field glasses searched the horizon. Dietrichsen remarked that perhaps Amundsen had gone on to the pole. "It would be just like him," he said. It was not until noon of the twenty-second, however, that we spotted them from an especially high hill of ice. The N-25 lay with her nose pointing into the air at an angle of 45 degrees, among a lot of rough hummocks and against a huge cake of old blue Arctic ice about 40 feet thick, three miles or so away. It was a rough-looking country, and the position of the N-25 was terrible to behold. To us it looked as though she had crashed into this ice.

We of the N-24 were not in too good shape where we were. We had torn the nails loose on the bottom of the plane when we took off from Kings Bay, so that she was leaking badly, in fact, the water was now above the bottom of the petrol tanks. Our forward motor was disabled, also. In short, we were badly wrecked. Things looked so hopeless to us at that moment that it seemed as though the impossible would have to happen if we were ever to get out.

First Days on the Ice.

That first day, while Dietrichsen and I had tried to reach the N-52, Omdahl had been trying to repair the motor. We dragged our canvas canoe up over hammocks and tumbled into icy crevasses, until we were thoroughly exhausted. The snow was more than two or three feet deep all over the ice, and we floundered through it, never knowing what we were going to step on next. Twice Dietrichsen went down between the floes, and only by hanging on to the canoe was he able to save himself from going down. After half a mile of this we were forced to give up and return.

We pitched our tent on top of the ice floes, moved all our equipment out of the plane into it, and tried to make ourselves as comfortable as possible. But there was no sleep for us and very little rest during the next five days. Omdahl was continually working on the motor, while Dietrichsen and I took turns at the pump. Only by the most incessant pumping were we able to keep the water down below the gasoline tanks.

Although we had located the N-25, her crew did not see us till the afternoon of the second day, which was May 23. We had taken the small inflated balloons that the meterologist had given us, with which to obtain data regarding the upper air strata, and after tying pieces of flannel to them, we had set them loose. We hoped that the wind would drift them over to the N-25 and so indicate to them in which direction to look for us. But the wind blew them in the wrong direction, or else they drifted too low and got tangled up in the rough ice.

Through all that first day the wind was blowing from the north, and we could see a few patches of open water. On the second day the wind shifted to the south and the ice began to close in on us. It was as though we were in the grasp of a gigantic claw that was slowly but surely contracting. We had a feeling that soon we could be crushed.

On the third day, May 24, the temperature was 11.5 degrees, and we had trouble with the freezing of our pump. The two planes were slowly drifting together, and we established a line of communication so that we knew each other's positions pretty well. Semaphoring is tedious work, for it requires two men, one with the flag and the other with a pair of field glasses, to read the signals. It took us a whole hour merely to signal our positions, after which we must wait for the return signals and then reply.

Looking for Amundsen.

After an exchange of signals we decided to try to reach Amundsen. We packed our canvas canoe, put it on our sledge, and started across what looked to us like mountainous hummocks. After going only a few hundred yards, we had to give up. The labor was too exhausting. With no sleep for three days, and only liquid food, our strength was not what it should have been. Leaving our canvas canoe, we now made up our packs of 50 pounds each, and pushed on. We might or we might not, return to our plane again.

According to my diary, after travelling the first two miles, we came upon a large lead that separated us from the N-25 and which we could see no way to cross. We talked to her crew by signal and they advised our returning. So, after a 7-hour trip, we returned to our sinking plane, having covered perhaps five and a half miles in about the same length of time it had taken us to fly from Spitzbergen to Lat. 87.44 degrees. Arriving at our plane, we pitched camp again and cooked a heavy pemmican soup over our Primus stove. Dietrichsen gave us a surprise by producing a small tin of coffee. We took some of the alcohol carried for the Primus stove and put it into the coffee, and, with pipes lighted, felt more or less happy.

As we smoked in silence, each with his own thoughts, Dietrichsen suddenly clasped his hands to his eyes, exclaiming, "Something is the matter with my eyes!" He was snow-blind, but never having experienced this before, did not know what had happened to him. We had been careful to wear our snow-glasses during most of the journey, but perhaps we had not been quite careful enough. After bandaging up Dietrichsen's eyes, Omdahl and I put him to bed and then returned to our smoking and thoughts. It seems strange, as I think back, that during those days nothing greatly surprised us. Everything that happened was accepted as part of the day's work. This is an interesting sidelight on man's adaptability to his environment.

Threat of the Ice Floes.

All our energies were now being bent on getting the N-24 up on the ice-floe, for we knew she would be crushed if we left her in the lead. The whole cake we were on was only about 200 meters in diameter, and there was only one level stretch on it of 80 meters. It was laborious work for Dietrichsen and myself to try to clear the soggy wet snow, for all we had to work with was one clumsy homemade shovel and our ice anchor. As I would loosen the snow by picking at it with the anchor, Dietrichsen would shovel it away.

Looking through our glasses at the N-25, we could see the propellers going, and Amundsen pulling up and down on the wings, trying to loosen the plane from the ice, but she did not budge. On the morning of May 26, Amundsen signaled to us that if we could not save our plane we should come over and help him. We had so far succeeded in getting the nose of our plane up to the ice-cake, but with only one engine working it was impossible to do more. Anyway, she was safe now from sinking, but not from being crushed, should the ice press in on her.

During the five days of our separation the ice had so shifted that the two planes were now plainly in sight of each other and only half a mile apart. During all that time the ice had been in continual movement, so that now all the heavy ice had moved from between the two camps. We signaled to the N-25 that we were coming, and making up loads of 80 pounds per man, we started across the freshly frozen lead that separated us from our companions. We were well aware of the chances we were taking in crossing this new ice, but we saw no alternative. We must get over to the N-25 with all possible speed, if we were ever to return to civilization.

Omdahl's Narrow Escape.

With our feet shoved loosely into our skis, for we never fastened them on up here for fear of getting tangled up should we fall into the sea, we shuffled along, slowly feeling our way over the thin ice. Omdahl was in the lead, and I and Dietrichsen, who had now recovered from his slight attack of snow-blindness, followed in that order. Suddenly I heard Dietrichsen yelling behind me, and before I knew what it was all about, Omdahl from ahead of me, also cried out and disappeared, as though the ice beneath him had suddenly opened and swallowed him.

The ice under me began to sag, and I quickly jumped sideways to avoid the same fate that had overtaken my companions. There just happened to be some old ice beside me, and that saved me. Lying down on my stomach, partly on this ledge of old ice and partly on the new ice, I drew the ski out and pulled Dietrichsen over until I could grab his pack and pull him partly out on the firmer ice, where he lay panting and exhausted.

Then I turned my attention to Omdahl. Only his pallid face showed above the water. It is strange, when I think that both these Norwegians had been conversing almost wholly in their native tongue, that Omdahl was now crying in English, "I'm gone! I'm gone!"—and he was almost gone, too. The only thing that kept him from going under was the fact that he kept digging his fingers into the ice. I reached him just in time to pull him over to the firmer ice. I got to him just before he sank and held him by his pack until Dietrichsen could crawl over to me and hold him while I cut off the pack. It took all the remaining strength of the two of us to drag Omdahl up on the old ice.

Our companions could not reach us, neither could they see us, as a few old ice-hummocks of great size stood directly in front of the N-25. They could do nothing but listen to the agonizing cries of their fellow men in distress. We finally succeeded in reaching our companions who gave us dry clothes and hot chocolate, and we were soon all right again, except for Omdahl's swollen and lacerated hands. Bot men had lost their skis. In view of the probability of being forced to tramp to Greenland, 400 miles away, the loss of their skis seemed a calamity.

The Reunion.

I was surprised at the change only five days had wrought in Captain Amundsen; he seemed to me to have aged 10 years. We now joined our companions in the work of freeing the N-25 from her precarious position.

As has already been stated, when Captain Amundsen's plane had started down into the lead, his rear motor backfired, and he was forced to land with only one motor working, which accounted for the position in which we now found N-25. She lay half on and half off an ice-floe; her nose was up on the cake and her tail down in the sea. By descending thus she had reduced her speed and saved herself from crashing on the cake of old blue ice that was directly ahead.

It seemed amazing that whereas five days ago the N-25 had found enough open water to land in, now there was not to be seen anywhere enough to launch a rowboat in; she was tightly locked in the grip of the shifting ice.

AN OLD STORY EMPHASIZED

Over fifty years ago we told how helpful Scott's Emulsion could be to young babies, growing children, the youth in the teens, the nursing mother and down to the aged.

Our story was believed because it was true and now, after fifty years, in all confidence, we are able to emphasize this story unchanged.

Scott's Emulsion of vitamin-tested, invigorating cod-liver oil with glycerine and hypophosphites of lime and soda, is just as potent today as it was five decades ago in its power to nourish and build up the human body.

You will be surprised how much strength and resistance can be obtained by taking a very little regularly every day.

them by cutting them off with a dollar apiece or merely making mention that he chose not to make bequests to them. That, under the Montana law, would have precluded their taking any action against his estate. His will, lacking anything of the sort, was open to attack. The daughters of Billy Clark, claiming him as their father, called in Edward C. Hyde, a Kansas City attorney, and now, after months devoted to the gathering of evidence, suit has been filed at Butte to stop the probating of the will and to secure for these women a fair shareof the Clark millions.

Something like $15,000,000 is the share to which the lawyer thinks these daughters of Billy and Kate Clark are entitled. Mrs. McWilliams, eldest of the sisters, the only one who was old enough when he went away to have a remembrance of him comes from her washtub when there is a knock at her cottage door, wiping her worn hands on her apron, admonishing her twin 5-year-old grandsons, Delwain and Eldene Compton, playing with their blocks, to be on their good behavior.

"We don't want anything that don't belong to us," she says. "If this man they call Senator Clark was my father we should have part of what he left. If he wasn't we don't want a penny of his money. I have lived by the work of my hands, sewing, washing, anything that was honest, and now I have the care of my daughter's children while she works in a factory at St. Joe. No, I am not as old as I look. Hard work has made me look like this. But work is no disgrace. If I am entitled to anything I want it | If not, I will go on working to the end."

uests at Miss Adelaide Gross' Affair for Her Guest Appear in Costumes Suited to Scene.

SUBTERRANEAN cafe, such as one night find unexpectedly in the Montmartre district of Paris, frequented by ilians, gangsters and pickpockets, was reduced Thursday night by Miss Adelaide s, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Haz Gross, as a setting for an Apache party, honor of Mrs. Adelaide Poulson of Orange, J., who is her guest.

The guests were directed to concrete steps the rear of the Gross home in Webster roves, to a roomy basement, or "den." corations were few. Faded draperies outed rooms and camouflaged necessary baseent equipment. Signs of all kinds, rangg from huge posters advertising the current heatrical bills and French wines, to American figures on a Western plain, adorned the walls; nd the dim light from red-shaded bulbs revealed wooden benches and a table or two at hich were seated slouching figures in the arb commonly associated with the "Apache."

An orchestra at one end of the room played nd sang music quite American in theme, and t the other, American food, potato chips, ckles and frankfurters were displayed in the staurant. Tin cups were hung from the eiling on strings, and the punch bowl was wash tub.

Costumes of almost every hue and style re in evidence. The hostess and her guest re faded blouses tucked in short tight velvet skirts, brilliant ribbons about their ists and a perky bow under one ear. Miss ross, her hair frizzed into a mass of curls, ore long, be-jeweled earrings, many bracets, and bright-colored stockings. Miss Grace itzer was attractive, even as a "bowery" ebitue, with a yellow and black striped eater to her hips, plaid skirt and feather , while curls pasted on her cheeks peeped om a velvet tam.

A stuffed bird perched on the red velvet worn at a swagger angle by Miss Ruth rman, and a matching sweater and black white skirt completed the costume. ancis Gross, uncle of the hostess, who reently came to St. Louis from New Mexico, John Janes, were artists from Montrtre in bright sashes, velvet jackets and s, and Mr. Gross, in denim overalls, a gh mustache and scarred nose, might have n taken for the janitor.

College Club Benefit Show On March 15

Supper Party, With George Arliss and 15 Members of His Cast as Guests, Will Follow Performance.

THE St. Louis College Club has announced plans for its annual benefit performance, to be given this year at the Shubert-Rialto theater, Monday night, March 15, when George Arliss opens with John Galsworthy's play, "Old English."

Each year the St. Louis College Club sponsors what is known as "College Club night" at one of the theaters. The club buys the house and the proceeds from the sale of tickets accrue to a fund loaned to young women desirous of obtaining a college education.

Mrs. Eugene McCarthy is president of the club, and Mrs. M. D. Curran chairman of the benefit committee. Mrs. Oreon E. Scott is in charge of the sale of boxes.

Following the performance there will be a supper party at Hotel Chase, with Mr. Arliss and 15 members of his cast as the guests of the club. Reservations for the supper will be made with Mrs. Curran.

The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States, and Mrs. Murray arrived last night from New York City for a three-day visit in St. Louis. They will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Burkham, 5035 Westminster place, at dinner today, and at an informal supper given this evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Shepley, 4943 Pershing avenue. Mrs. Shepley will also have a small luncheon for Mrs. Murray tomorrow.

A number of important post-Easter weddings are being planned and the dates chosen. Miss Ella Marie Wilson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert E. Wilson of the Berry road, Webster Groves, and Alfred Chambers Carr Jr., will be married at 5:30 o'clock the afternoon of April 17. Miss Julia Fay Carton is to be the maid of honor, and Chauncey Knapp best man. Other members of the bridal party have not been announced. Tentative plans are being made for the marriage of Miss Lucy Terry and David Randolph Calhoun the same day, and on the preceding Saturday, April 10, the wedding of Miss Mary Alice Kelsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio N. Kelsey of Montclair, N. J., and Wallace Herndon Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jay Herndon Smith of 6500 Ellenwood avenue, will take place at the residence of the bride's parents. The couple will spend their honeymoon at Hot Springs, Va., and will make their home at 7138 Forsythe boulevard, St. Louis.

Reception Given Army and Navy Men in Capital

Service Men in Full Dress Uniforms File Past President and Mrs. Coolidge — Longworths Married 20 Years.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.

THE big social event of the week was the Army and Navy reception at the White House on Thursday night when the service men were the guests of honor. Secretary of the Navy Curtis D. Wilbur and Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis presented the guests to President and Mrs. Coolidge as they passed the receiving line and the reception was a brilliant and colorful spectacle, all honor guests being in full dress uniforms. Mrs. Davis was an attractive figure in light blue brocade made with a slight train.

As the line of men passed, Secretary Davis was greeted by comrades of the war and a group of naval officers gathered about the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Charles S. Dewey and talked of their days at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station during the war.

President and Mrs. Coolidge are now fairly embarked on the pleasant task of eating "Cabinet dinners." On Tuesday night, the Secretary of the Treasury and Miss Ailsa Mellon gave their dinner for the Coolidges and had a distinguished company to meet them. Inasmuch as the Cabinet hosts now strive for original menus as well as different guests from those present at other Cabinet dinners the President is spared the monotony of eating the same type of dinner, week after week.

Vice President and Mrs. Dawes also have a heavy schedule of dinner invitations before Lent. Mrs. Dawes was the luncheon guest on Monday of Mrs. Frank B. Kellogg, wife of the Secretary of State.

Washington is interested to discover who will take the part of Martha Washington in the Mardi Gras Ball to be held on Tuesday for the benefit of the George Washington Memorial Foundation. The ball is to be given under the most distinguished patronage, Mrs. Dawes, wife of the Vice President, and Mme. Riano Ioyenne of the Diplomatic Corps being on the Committee of Arrangements and

Missouri People Now in Europe

Paris Nearly Deserted by Tourists During the Resort Season.

Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

PARIS, Feb. 3.—This is the season of the year that finds Paris with its fewest American visitors. Those who arrive in Europe via the North Atlantic route, landing at Boulogne, Havre or Cherbourg, stop in the French capital just long enough to find their landlegs before proceeding on to the Riviera, Italy or Egypt, or to Switzerland for the winter sports. And to those returning to the United States, Paris reverts to "the place where they take the boat train." The permanent American colony also is in a fair way of being depleted, many of its members are now in Nice, "the winter social capital of the Continent," Monte Carlo, Cannes, Algiers and Cairo, and, in recent years, an increasing number to Florida. Social events of a strictly American character, therefore, become a small round of teas, dinners and dances.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Ray Carter of St. Louis, who have been in Switzerland for the winter sports and social season at St. Moritz, have arrived in Paris from Geneva and are spending a few days at the Hotel de Crillon on the Place de la Concorde.

Miss Georgette A. Madill of St. Louis, who recently left the French capital in company with Mrs. Edward S. Robert of St. Louis for Menton, on the French Riviera, has returned to Paris and is now at the Hotel Plaza-Athenee.

Miss Gertrude Bedford of Philadelphia, was hostess at a tea given last week at the New Union Hotel in Dresden, Germany. Her guests included Mrs. A. T. Haeberle, wife of the United States Consul in Dresden, who is from Missouri, and Mrs. Emmeline Cogho of St. Louis, and her sister, Mrs. Augusta Birkigt of Hoboken, N. J.

Mrs. W. C. Koenig of Texas, wife of the assistant military attache of the United States Embassy in Paris, entertained a few guests at bridge followed by a buffet supper last week. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Russell of St. Louis.

Dr. and Mrs. James Harding of St. Louis had as their guests Mrs. J. Willoughby Mitchell and Walter Bowden at a dance at the American Women's Club last week.

Another Women's Club event of the week was a luncheon at which the Duc de Broglie read extracts from a journal written by his great-great-grandfather during the latter's visit to America in the late eighteenth century. The extracts were enlivened by comments on the social life of certain circles in Boston. Missouri club women attending the luncheon included Mrs. Clifford Webb and Mrs. James E. Harding, both of St. Louis.

Ambassador and Mrs. Houghton entertained last week at Crewe House in London. Among those received were Premier and Mrs. Baldwin, Miss Baldwin, Myron T. Herrick, United States Ambassador to France, and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Sterling, formerly of St. Louis, the former being counsellor of the Embassy in London.

Miss Jane Carter Burns and Miss Barbara Lee Johnson of St. Louis, who have been traveling in the Central European countries, were recent visitors to Vienna, staying for several days at the Hotel Bristol.

Mrs. Henry Parkson Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Scott and Miss Alice Scott of St. Louis, who have been traveling on the continent for the past months, are in St. Moritz, Switzerland, for the winter sports and social season there. They are at the Suvretta House.

Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer of New York and Miss Maud Macarow of New York, who have been staying in Paris for some time, have gone to Cannes.

It is a change indeed to see the attendance at the Ritz Sunday evening dinner dance predominantly French, a proof certain that the Americans have vanished to warmer climes. One of the few American hostesses at the last one was Mrs. George Church of St. Louis, whose guests included Mrs. Virginia Land-Blanchard and her daughter, Miss Emily Blanchard of Shreveport, La., Count Wurmbrund, Count Ernest Wurmbrund and Forbes Watkins.

Reception Given Army and Navy Men in Capital

many novel features have been planned.

February has a pleasant date for Speaker and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth in their twentieth twentieth wedding anniversary on Feb. 17. China weddings have been popular this year with officials, for the President and Mrs. Coolidge observed theirs in October, 1925, and the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. William M. Jardine had the same anniversary in September of last year. Mrs. Longworth was the twelfth White House bride, and the scene of her marriage, the East Room, presented a picture on Feb. 17, 1906, which lingers in the memories of those fortunate enough to have witnessed it.

Society has been asked in to view one of the finest collections of Whistler paintings in America, that belonging to Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, wife of the Senator from Rhode Island, formerly Mrs. George K. Vanderbilt, who has placed them in their new home in R street Northwest, where exclusive little dinners are constantly being given.

One of the most picturesque and interesting events of this week was the naval wedding which took place at the home of Rear Admiral and Mrs. William A. Moffett when their daughter, Miss Janet Moffett, was married to Ensign Elliott McFarlan Moore last night. The wedding guests included high ranking officials of the Government, including the Secretary of the Navy Curtis Wilbur and Army and Navy officers and leaders of Washington society. Admiral Moffett, the bridegroom and the bride's brother, Midshipman George Moffett, were in full dress naval uniforms.

Another picturesque note was given the nuptials by the fact that the bride's only attendants were her five brothers and sisters. Miss Betty Moffett, a young school girl, was maid of honor; Beverley Moffett, a sister, and Charles Moffett, also a small child, were ribbon bearers. Midshipman George Moffett and William A. Moffett Jr., who will go to Annapolis in June, were the ushers. The best man was the brother-in-law of the groom, Addison Burnham Jr., of Boston.

One of the most entertained visitors in Washington this week was the Duchess of Norfolk, who is the guest of her kinsman, Sir Esme Howard, the Ambassador of Great Britain. Because of the mourning there, no official dinners will be given for her, but she has been the guest at many luncheons and teas. On Thursday Mrs. John B. Henderson entertained at a luncheon of 24 for the Duchess.

jet were earrings and huge glass beads and rings and bracelets wore wrapped about throats and hands. Some of the guests, perhaps dubious as to a selection of costume, wore garments of historical interest. For instance, Miss Caroline Peck appeared in the black satin basque, heavily beaded in jet, which was worn by her mother at one of President Cleveland's inaugural receptions. Robert Gross Jr. was a cave man, with a skin of white fur pinned about him, wearing a long blond wig and carrying a club.

Other guests, in more or less picturesque costumes, were Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Francisco, Misses Virginia Cox, Gertrude Dubuque, Alice Muckerman, Helen Peck and Eugenia Armstrong; Mr. and Mrs. James C. Smith, son-in-law and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gross; Frank Ramacciotti and Bob Hannegan of St. Louis University football fame, Dr. and Mrs. Paul F. Kistner, the latter as a green-clad fortune teller; Philip Rohan, Jimmy Byrne, Bernard Thole, Bob Denvir, Francis Drew and Carl Otto.

PRINCE OF WALES PLANS SPRING VISIT TO BIARRITZ

Copyright, 1926, by the Press and Pulitzer Publishing Cos. (New York World and Post-Dispatch.)

LONDON, Feb. 13.—Latest reports say the Prince of Wales is contemplating another visit to Biaritz this spring and will go there during the festive season that succeeds the March gaities of the Riviera. The Prince was last there two years ago, when his visit added greatly to the social life of the exclusive resort.

Meanwhile Edward is taking things pretty easy during the time required for the healing of his broken collar bone. Unfortunately the injury makes it impossible for him to indulge in one of his favorite pastimes—playing the ukulele.

Noted Women Due This Week

Leaders in Many Activities Coming for National Exposition at Coliseum.

St. Louis seldom has the good fortune to entertain at one time as many women of national prominence as will be in the city this week in attendance on the Congress of Women, which will be held under the auspices of the Women's National Exposition Feb. 16 to 20 at the New Coliseum.

Miss Helen Fraser of London, England, a friend of Lady Astor and a candidate of the Liberal party in the 1922 election, and Miss Elinor Stafford Millar of Sydney, Australia, are two of the international women leaders who will be in St. Louis for the congress. Mrs. Emily Newell Blair of Joplin, Mo., vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Mrs. Ella Boole of Brooklyn, N. Y., national president of the W. C. T. U.; Miss Bessie Parker Brueggeman, chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Bureau, Washington; Miss Emma Knell, Carthage, Mo., only woman member of the present General Assembly of Missouri; Dr. Jeannette Hubbard Bolles, Omaha, Neb., president of the Osteopathic Women's National Association; Miss Agnes Regan, acting director of the Catholic School of Social Service, Washington; Miss Mary Anderson, director of Woman's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor, Washington; Maj. Jules Stimson, a former St. Louisan, now head of the United States Army Nurse Corps, Washington; Miss Mina Van Winkle, president of the International Association of Policewomen, Washington; Mrs. Lena Lord Davis, nationally known missionary to China; Judge Mary Grossman of Cleveland, O.; Miss Florence Lasker, director of the Emigrant Aid of the Jewish Council of Women, Ellis Island, N. Y., are among others who have accepted invitations to the congress. Mrs. Byrd Fuqua of Alpine Lake, Colo., who controls a 1400-acre ranch, has already arrived in St. Louis and is at Hotel Chase with the largest collections of Indian and pioneer American relics in the United States.

Smoke Abatement Show at Exhibition

The Woman's Smoke Abatement League, of which Mrs. Harvey G. Mudd is chairman, will present each evening at the Woman's Exposition, except Thursday and Sunday, a "Smoke Ballett-Comique." Mrs. Willard Bartlett is chairman of the Pageantry Committee in charge of the production. Its object is to show the effect of a clear atmosphere compared to smoke-laden skies.

Members of the cast are pupils of the Clark School for Dancing. Jack Frost and his ballet of snowflakes in Spotless Town will be followed by a similar group in Smokeville, after which there will be a dance by the snowflakes in sooty St. Louis. Each group will be accompanied by its chimney, capped in white, gray or black snowflakes, and the final number is a dance of the cleanup crew.

Famous Painting To Be Shown Here

The famous Clark painting of the Stone Mountain Confederate Memorial, now on exhibition at Birmingham, Ala., will be shipped to St. Louis for the memorial booth at the Woman's Exposition to be held at the Coliseum Feb. 16 to 22. The Harvest Campaign for the sale of the Confederate Memorial half dollars in St. Louis will begin with the Exposition. The board of directors of the Stone Mountain Confederate Monument Association of St. Louis is made up of Mrs. Charles Breckenridge Faris, chairman; Mrs. John C. Roberts, vice chairman; Mmes. Lon C. Stephens, Elliott W. Major, Herbert S. Hadley, Frederick D. Gardner and Paul Brown. The members of the executive board are Mmes. John A. Hope, George F. Bergfeld, John D. Hurck, A. M. Seawell, L. L. Bergfeld and A. E. Morgan.

The Stone Mountain Memorial project will occupy an important place in the demonstration of women's work and endeavor because the memorial plan was started by Mrs. Helen Plane, the widow of a Confederate officer who gave up his honeymoon to lead a company of Georgia volunteers to Virginia, and fell mortally wounded in one of his first battles. His memory and his son, born after his death, were the dominant motives in Mrs. Plane's life. She formed an organization for raising money, employing a sculptor and carving the monument. Under an administration affected in 1923 and headed by Hollins N. Randolph, a Virginian, and the son of a Confederate officer, and a great grandson of Thomas Jefferson, the association began to function immediately.

A picture of Mrs. Plane will be displayed in the Stone Mountain Confederate Memorial booth at the exposition.

MISS MARTHA STROH

Miss Stroh, who is president of the Dramatic Club at Lenox Hall, will preside at a luncheon to be given at the Missouri Athletic Association, Feb. 23.

Announcement was made recently of the engagement of Miss Bergs, daughter of Mr and Mrs. J. P Bergs, and Anthony O'Neil Crook of 6124 Pershing avenue.

D. A. R. CHAPTER IN LONDON

Organization Plans Active Social Program.

Copyright, 1926, by the Press and Pulitzer Publishing Cos. (New York World and Post-Dispatch).

LONDON, Feb. 13.—It may surprise many American readers to know that not only is there a very flourishing chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution—the D. A. R.—in England, but that the organization is planning a very active social program for the coming summer. The main purpose will be to see that visiting American women and representatives of American Women's Clubs receive full social attention.

At a luncheon here a few days ago it was announced that the Girls' Club, of which Mrs. Horace Lee Washington, wife of the American Consul-General to London, is the patroness, is preparing a book on Washington's ancestors in England. Fifty volumes of the famous lineage books of the D. A. R. are shortly to be presented to the British Museum. The charter to be granted to the London Chapter of the famous American organization will read: "The London, England, Chapter of the D. A. R." It will begin to function in April.

MUSIC FEATURES AT ST. PETERSBURG

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Feb. 13.—St. Petersburg's principal boast this year is music. Musicians of national and international importance have already appeared and more are scheduled to appear before the close of the season. Among the artists heard are Fritz Kreisler, who appeared here Tuesday evening in concert, and Jan Ignace Paderewski, in a Saturday night piano recital.

With social events the new Jungle Country Club Hotel, just completed, was opened last Sunday afternoon. Members of the Country Club and invited guests attended a house warming and tea from 4 to 6 o'clock. Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Fuller, owners, and Al Lang, president of the Jungle Country Club, and Mrs. Lang received the guests.

Eighty distinguished newspaper publishers and editors, representing the State Press Association of every state in the Union, arrived in St. Petersburg last week. While here for two days the members of the party played golf over the Pasadena course, the Coffee Pot Golf course and the Jungle Links. The women of the party were entertained by a committee of local society women.

Formal announcement was made Monday of the engagement of Miss Frances Simpson, daughter of Mrs. F. E. Simpson of 4216 Westminster place and Oliver C. Funsch. The news was told at a bridge luncheon given by Mrs. Simpson for 12 of her daughter's closest friends. The table was decorated in red with a centerpiece of two large red hearts, surrounded by American beauty roses. Two large red candles provided illumination. The announcements were concealed in the petals of rose place cards.

Miss Simpson attended Washington University and is a member of Alpha Chi Omega.

Mr. Funsch is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver J. Funsch, formerly of St. Louis and now of West Palm Beach, Fla. He also was a former student of Washington University. No date has been set for the wedding.

Notes of Society At Florida Resorts

Valentine Spirit Prevails in Round of Gay Parties at Palm Beach.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Feb. 13.—The Valentine spirit was the keynote of entertaining in Palm Beach this week and many dinners and luncheons are being given in honor of the day, while the Club de Montmarte will have a special gala night, as will Whitehall, with its exclusive dinner dances. Mrs. Frank Vernon Skiff of Far Hills, N. J., is giving one of the largest buffet luncheons of the day at her new winter home here. Several parties are also being arranged on board yachts and beach parties will be numerous among the younger set.

The opening of the fashionable Bath and Tennis Club south of Breakers Beach was celebrated on Lincoln's birthday, and a large attendance of founder members and their guests was noted. Guests ate peeled oranges and grapefruit from sharp sticks, as one does at the bathing beach in Nassau. An orchestra helped make the opening a jolly affair.

The annual Washington's birthday ball at the Poinciana, the attendance at which is expected to be 4000, will take the appearance of a Pompeiian fete. The proceeds are to be given to the charities of Palm Beach County as usual.

The Hotel Alba is entertaining many notables, including our retiring Ambassador from Spain, Alexander P. Moore, and Lord Camoys of London, who married Miss Mildred Sherman of New York, acclaimed several years ago by Helleu, the French etcher, as the most beautiful American society girl. Lady Camoys remained in New York to visit her family and Lord Camoys is returning to join her there today before sailing for England.

The formal opening of the beautiful Hotel Alba on the seventeenth with a Spanish fete will probably be one of the most brilliant events Palm Beach society has ever known. This week at the Paderewski concert on Monday night and the lecture Friday evening, large audiences assembled.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 13.—A striking closing to a succession of colorful events featuring Miami's most brilliant social season will be the "Pirate Ball" with which Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Gimbel of New York will entertain 400 guests at the Miami Biltmore Country Club next Friday night. The invitations to the "Pirate Party" are red cards decorated with pictures of pirates, a pirate flag and the skull and crossbones.

Simple Application That Dissolves Blackheads

No more squeezing and pinching to get rid of those unsightly blemishes, blackheads. There is one simple, safe and sure way to get them out and that is to dissolve them. Get about two ounces of calonite powder from your druggist—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet cloth—rub briskly over the blackheads for a few seconds—wash the parts and every blackhead will be gone.

Pinching and squeezing out blackheads make large pores and you cannot get all of the blackheads out this way—while this simple application of calonite powder and water disolves every particle of them and leaves the skin and pores in their natural condition.

Not Worried

MISS ANNA F. APPELSTEIN

"I used to bother about whether my powder was on straight," says pretty Miss Anna Appelstein, 5453 Irving St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Now I'm using the exquisitely textured Black and White Face Powder and I worry no more, because this satin-smooth powder goes on evenly and 'stays put' for hours without having to be renewed. I love the velvety, natural-looking finish it gives, and its elusive 'Incense of Flowers' perfume."

Dealers everywhere are selling and recommending the dainty 50c boxes of this delightful face powder, which is proving so popular among discriminating women.

HOW TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Makes One Look Younger.

Men and women who used to be called Grandpa and Grandma are now setting the styles by darkening their gray hair at home.

For instance, J. A. McCrea, a well-known Californian, recently made the following statement:

"Anyone can prepare a simple mixture in five minutes, that will darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. Merely take a half pint of water, add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

"These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at trifling cost. Apply to the hair twice weekly with a comb. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and will not rub off."

"Whyte-Fox" is a product of the Lucky Tiger Remedy Co., makers of the famous Lucky Tiger Hair Tonic.

Foot Expert

From Headquarters to be Here

February 15 to 20, Inclusive

THROUGH special arrangements, a Wizard foot relief representative will be at our store all this week to offer you his foot relief services and expert advice. If you are troubled with—

Fallen Arches	Enlarged Ankles
Painful Heels	Painful Callouses
Leaning Ankles	Cramped Toes
Run-Over Heels	Calf or Knee Pains

—it will be to your interest and comfort to take advantage of this opportunity to consult this foot relief representative. He thoroughly understands the human foot. His advice will guide you to relief from your foot troubles.

Examination Without Charge

Consult the special representative from Wizard headquarters. Learn the cause of your Foot Trouble. Without charge a skilled examination will be made of your stockinged feet. You merely slip off your shoes, just as you do in buying a new pair. The cause of your trouble will be revealed and you will be given the benefit of a test fitting which will convince you that you may have relief. There is no inconvenience—no obligation.

Why Let Your Feet Hurt?

Fallen arches, leaning ankles, callouses, rotation of the heel and other foot troubles may be traced to the breaking down of the delicate bone structure of the foot. One or more of the bones in the 26-bone structure has given away under the weight of the body. Displaced bones are pressing against sensitive nerves. Pain, enlargement or swelling are nature's warning that your feet need help.

Restoration of the foot structure to natural position is a means of relief. This is quickly and comfortably accomplished with smooth all-leather Wizard Arch Builders, adjustable at the heel, ball and arch. Wizard Arch Builders—invisible when worn—are feather light. They may be worn in practically any style shoe that meets with your approval. The results in comfort and graceful poise are priceless.

I DO NOT SELL GLASSES!

You can buy pieces of glass and a frame for a dollar or less. Why pay more? Of course, if you want relief from eyestrain, headaches and other annoying symptoms of defective vision, pieces of glass and a frame are of no value whatever.

I am selling the knowledge and skill in the correction of visual defects gained through specialized study and research, and a quarter of a century's practice of my profession.

It TUMBLES the Clothes as it CIRCULATES them

Through and through the clothes goes the hot, sudsy water—as the WHIRLPOOL CIRCULATOR tumbles them under and swirls them 'round. Never idle a second—always in lively action—the clothes come out quicker, cleaner than you ever thought possible.

A SPECTACULAR demonstration IN YOUR OWN HOME

The Whirlpool is built up to the high standards set by 27 years of uninterrupted "1900" Washer leadership. And it embodies revolutionary advantages resulting from unequalled "1900" experience. NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Owen Davis, playwright, filed suit today in the Supreme Court for $250,000 damages against Harold Lloyd, film comedian, and his associates in the motion picture business. Davis alleges that Lloyd pirated his play, "The Nervous Wreck" and made it into a movie called "Why Worry?"

Hal Roach and Fred Neumeyer, both movie men, and the Pathe Distributing Corporation of New York were named co-defendants.

PEYTON CARR CURIOS SOLD FOR $39,822

Far East Collection of St. Louisan Disposed of in New York.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Curios from the Far East in the collection of Peyton T. Carr of St. Louis brought $39,822 for 175 objects, in the American Art Galleries, here last Thursday. The best price was $7600, which W. W. Seaman, agent, paid for a carved jade-colored vase and stands of the imperial workshops, in the Chien-Tung period. Seaman bought also a carved crystal bird vase for $950 and a carved turquoise matrix Buddha for $1900.

Howard Heinz got a carved jade covered bowl for $600. A jade covered dish, pierced with eight Buddhistic symbols, went to Roland Moore for $340. Parrish Watson got a green jade kero with cover for $2600. Mr. B. Craid paid $950 for a jade two-handled vase. An imperial rock crystal sphere was bought by Clapp & Graham for $1900. Frederick Brown gave $600 for a porcelain brush holder. S. W. MacDonald paid $700 for a mille fleur double gourd vase, and $800 for a Chinese medallion rug.

POLICEMAN DIDN'T SMELL GLASSES; WARRANT REFUSED

Prosecuting Attorney So Explains Refusal of Office to Issue Search Order.

Patrolman Womack's failure to smell glasses in which he suspected liquor had been served in the saloon of Rudolph Schweitzer, 323 Pine street, caused the refusal of a search warrant for the place last week, according to Prosecuting Attorney Schweitzer, who yesterday answered Womack's complaint that the warrant was refused because the premises to be searched were inadequately described.

"Womack's affidavit for a warrant stated merely that the officer observed several men, who appeared intoxicated, leave the saloon Feb. 4, and that, on entering, he saw a number of empty glasses on the bar," Prosecuting Attorney Schweitzer said. "Mr. Fania, my assistant, asked Womack if he saw any liquor in the saloon. The officer's answer was negative. Fania tried to help him out by asking him if he smelled liquor in the glasses. Womack said no again, so there was nothing to justify the issuance of a warrant."

In a complaint to Chief Gerk, Womack declared Fania at first refused to issue the warrant, but later told him it would be issued. While the warrant was being typed by a stenographer Fania again changed his mind, according to Womack, and declared the evidence to be insufficient. Prosecuting Attorney Schweitzer declared the policeman's version to be inaccurate, stating Fania never intimated that the warrant would be issued on the evidence furnished by Womack.

A HUNTER ON A SALARY

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13.—San Francisco has a policeman who is the envy of all Nimrods. He is permitted not only to hunt in Golden Gate Park, but he also gets paid for it and he finds hunting good.

Each year Patrolman Warren N. Phillips, who is the official exterminator of predatory animals in the park, takes around 100 fox a year, 25 to 30 weasels, a coyote or two, coons, hawks and other undesirables of animal life who visit the city's playground to prey on the domesticated creatures of the park. They come from the Sutro forest—a densely wooded tract in the heart of San Francisco—and from the open spaces down the peninsula apparently unterrified by the bright lights or rumble of night time traffic.

CONTRACT FOR NEW MATERNITY HOSPITAL SIGNED

Construction to Begin at Once on Seven-Story Building at Kingshighway and Euclid.

SITE PROVIDED BY WASHINGTON U.

Structure to Face Forest Park Will Provide Modern Facilities in Every Department.

Contracts for the new building of the St. Louis Maternity Hospital have been signed by the board of directors of the hospital and work will begin immediately and be pushed as rapidly as the weather permits.

The new building will form an important addition to the Washington University group, Kingshighway at Euclid avenue. It will embody the latest ideals in medical practice, and will afford facilities long desired for treatment of maternity cases.

The St. Louis Maternity Hospital, which was established in 1908, has been located since 1912 at 4518 Washington boulevard. These quarters have long been inadequate for the growing needs of this community.

The Rockefeller Foundation in 1923 offered an appropriation of $550,000 for research in the diseases of new born infants and teaching of obstetrics, provided a modern maternity hospital of at least 60 ward beds be erected. With this endowment fund in sight a coalition between the St. Louis Maternity Hospital and the Department of Obstetrics of Washington University Medical School was formed and a campaign for funds for such a building with modern equipment was made in February, 1924.

Site Provided.

The medical staff of the St. Louis Maternity Hospital and the Washington University, together with Dr. S. S. Goldwater, the authority on hospital construction in the United States, and La Beaume & Klein, St. Louis architects, have been engaged in designing a building which is expected to realize the highest standards according to the latest methods of hospital practice.

A site has been provided by the Washington University Medical School on the vacant property at the northwest corner of Kingshighway and Euclid avenue, fronting south on Forest Park. The new building will occupy the western half of this property adjoining the present ward buildings of Barnes Hospital. An intervening open space of about 65 feet between the new building and the east ward of Barnes Hospital, will be provided, but the new structure will be connected with the present Barnes plant by a continuation of the Barnes Hospital ambulatory.

The building will be "T" shaped in plan, with a frontage of 90 feet on Kingshighway, and a wing extending northward toward the present Washington University Clinic Building. The plans call for a structure of seven floors and a large solarium and septic wing, making in reality eight stories. In design, the building will harmonize with the present structures in the Washington University Medical group; in interior arrangement, every attention has been given to the comfort of both ward and private patients, as also to the facilities for advanced medical instruction which the endowment contemplates. There will be ample laboratories for research work, modern and well-equipped operating and delivery rooms, well-arranged nurseries, diet kitchens, linen and utility rooms as well as necessary offices of business administration and reception rooms.

Designed for Comfort.

The entrance foyer on the first floor designed in the Adam style, will relieve any impression of institutionalism, and both wards and private rooms have been designed to provide a maximum of sunshine, ventilation and comfort.

All materials have been specified for their sanitary efficiency and durability, and the equipment throughout will represent the best judgment of the medical profession. The building will contain its own general kitchen but will be heated from the central power plant of the Washington University Medical group.

The present Executive Committee of the medical staff consists of the following: Dr. Fred Taussig, chief of staff; Dr. Q. U. Newell, secretary; Dr. Hugo Ehrenfest, Dr. George M. Tuttle, Dr. G. D. Royston and Dr. H. S. Crossen.

The chairman of the Building Committee is Emmett M. Myers, and the officers of the hospital are: President, Mrs. Benoist Carton; first vice president, Mrs. John C. Roberts; second vice president, Mrs. Adolph Singer; third vice president, Mrs. D. C. Biggs; fourth vice president, Mrs. Emmett M. Myers; fifth vice president, Mrs. Kenneth Green; sixth vice president, Mrs. Alvin Goldman; seventh vice president, Mrs. Leslie Dana; eighth vice president, Mrs. J. I. Epstein; ninth vice president, Mrs. Lon Hocker; tenth vice president, Mrs. Scott Porter; eleventh vice president, Mrs. Dwight Davis; treasurer, Mrs. Robert Burns; recording secretary, Mrs. Harry Lesser; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Charles Duncker Jr.; superintendent, Miss Isabelle M. Baumhoff.

The John Hill Construction Co. has been awarde dthe general contract for the building.

Design for New Hospital; Apartment and Residences of Interest

Sketch of new building for St Louis Maternity Hospital, to be erected as an addition to the Washington University group, Kingshighway and Euclid avenue. La Beaume & Klein, architects.

Ladue road residence for John Love. Jamieson & Spearl, architects.

Spanish residence to be erected in La Hacienda, facing the St. Louis Country Club on Price and Ladue roads, for Alfred M. Baker Jr.

NEW HOME ON LADUE ROAD OF ST. LOUIS COUNTY STONE

The new country home, now under construction for John Love, and located on the south side of the Ladue road and west of the St. Louis Country Club, is to be of St. Louis County stone, laid up roughly and whitewashed. The roof will be slated in light and dark gray green shades of Vermont slate.

Living quarters will face the south, overlooking a wide terrace from which the grounds slope to the south. At the east the terrace ends in a large projecting porch. From the porch, steps will lead to a small garden protected on the north by a wall enclosing the yard between the kitchen and garage.

The interior, to be treated as simply as the exterior, will be without wainscoting, ornamental ceilings or other elaborate work. The house is about two-thirds completed.

POWDER BLAST ROCKS ALTON LIKE AN EARTHQUAKE

Windows Broken Five Miles From Explosion at the Equitable Works at East Alton.

FIFTH BLOWUP IN FIVE YEARS

One Man Injured Seriously in Destruction of Corning Plant, Where Powder Is Ground.

A concussion like an earthquake shook the territory northeast of St. Louis at 8:20 a. m. yesterday. It cracked plaster, rattled dishes and shattered hundreds of windows in Alton, East Alton and other places.

Some mistook the shock for an earthquake, but not the experienced residents of the two Altons. "The powder mill's gone up again," was their quick judgment.

Persons who rushed to the street in Alton, and even in East St. Louis, reported seeing a parachute-shaped cloud of dense smoke rising over East Alton. The corning mill of the Equitable Powder Co. at East Alton had exploded.

In this mill blasting powder is ground down from slabs to commercial sizes. Several tons of blasting powder went up in smoke, taking along the frame structure that housed the machinery.

Freakish Results.

The terrific impact produced freakish results. Buildings of the Equitable Powder Co. and its affiliated concern, the Western Cartridge Co., were but slightly damaged, although nearest to the mill. Farther away in East Alton windows and store fronts were blown out, and in Alton, five miles east, windows, plaster and dishes gave way.

Relatives of employes at the Western and Equitable plants besieged newspaper offices and other places with inquiries, until it became known only one employe had been injured.

The employe was Lawronce Taylor, 25 years old. He is in a critical condition at St. Joseph's Hospital, Alton.

Taylor's job was to load the mill with wet powder and then to leave the building and start the machinery from the outside. At intervals he would repeat the loading operation, always stopping the machinery before entering the frame structure which housed the mill.

Worker Blown 50 Feet.

Fifty cents an hour was his wage for this work, according to his mother, Mrs. Alice Taylor, a widow, with whom he lived at 207 West Main street, East Alton. He and three other sons, John Elmer and Louis, who live at the same address, support the mother. Elmer is employed at the Western Cartridge Co., which has plants on the same tract.

The explosion occurred as Taylor was walking up a ramp toward the entrance to the mill building. He was blown 50 feet away. His face and body were severely burned, and his left leg was broken.

As in previous explosions at East Alton, the cause may never become known, because the "evidence" was destroyed. Friction within the mill may have been responsible.

There have been four other explosions in the Equitable Powder Co. plants, chiefly in the corning mill, in the last five years, a total of four men being killed and three seriously injured. The worst explosion of the district was at the Western Cartridge Co., July 10, 1923, when 12 employes were killed and 11 injured.

ST. LOUIS YOUTH TO BE TRIED AGAIN FOR MURDER

Case of Edward Barber, Once Sentenced to Death, Sent Back to Court at Terre Haute, Ind.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

BRAZIL, Ind., Feb. 13.—The second trial of Edward Barber, 20 years old, of St. Louis, for the murder of Detective Steve Kendall of Terre Haute, probably will be held in Terre Haute where it originally was scheduled before coming here on a change of venue last Monday. Judge Hutchison sent the case back to the original court.

Barber and Joseph Parker, 23, also of St. Louis, are serving 25-year terms for highway robbery at Terre Haute. Detective Kendall was shot Jan. 24, 1924, in a holdup and both youths were sentenced to death, but granted a new trial. Recently the murder charge against Parker was dismissed. Judge Hutchison has refused three applications for a similar ruling in Barber's case.

A committee of the parents took the resolution before the Rock Hill School Board, also meeting in the building, but the board refused to accept it because one of its members was absent. The resolution will be formally submitted at the next regular meeting, Feb. 26.

Opposed to St. Louis Banquets Unless Treated On Basis of Equality, They Say.

Alberto G. Abreu, consul from Cuba; Luis Sandobal, Mexican consul, and Alirio Parra Marquez, Venezuelan consul, said last night that they intend to refuse to be present at any future banquet in St. Louis in which they are not accorded the same courtesies that are extended to consuls of European nations.

Sandobal said that at a banquet given the French Ambassador last April, the representatives of certain European nations were seated at the speaker's table, while the Latin-American consuls were placed with the rest of the guests.

NEW TERMINAL LOOP PLANNED FOR WELLSTON

Six-Story Arcade Building to Cost $500,000 Will Be Built on Site of Present Tracks.

EASTON CARS TO GO IN VIA THEODOSIA

Acquisition of Site on Ferguson-St. Charles Line Part of Same Realty Transaction.

By BERRY MOORE.

Plans have been made for a six-story building with arcade features for the northwest corner of Easton and Hodiamont avenues, with a frontage on Hodiamont of approximately 210 feet and on Easton of 45 feet. Estimated cost of the proposed building is $500,000.

The building is to be erected by N. Pelligreen, president of the Pelligreen Construction Co., who has acquired the site from the United Railways. The first floor will be adapted for department store purposes.

The station and terminus of the Kirkwood-Ferguson, St. Charles and Wellston car lines occupy the west part of the Easton avenue frontage of this block, ownership of which is retained by the United Railways.

New Terminal Loop.

Through an agreement entered into, Pelligreen will convey to the United Railways a tract with a frontage of 25 feet on the west of Hodiamont, embracing the southwest corner of Theodosia avenue, 119 feet on the south side of Theodosia avenue and 120 feet on the east side of the Kirkwood-Ferguson right-of-way.

This will give the United Railways the entire west half of this block, intersecting from Easton to Theodosia avenue.

A new loop is to be installed on this side of the block with the Wellston cars entering the loop at Theodosia and Hodiamont avenues.

The north half of the block is now occupied by one story business buildings on Theodosia and Hodiamont avenues, erected by the Pelligreen Construction Co.

Construction of the proposed building is to begin as soon as existing leases expire.

As president of the Pelligreen Construction Co., Pelligreen has built numerous large structures in St. Louis.

Industrial Sites Active.

Major real estate acquisitions in the industrial sections were announced yesterday following others early in the week in the central business area.

The extensive building of the John T. Milliken Chemical Co. at the southeast corner of Third and Cedar streets, was purchased by the Fulton Bag and Cotton Mills. David Bailey, realtor, handled the transaction.

An attractive feature of this property is a switch served by the Iron Mountain Railroad. The plans of the purchaser in this connection could not be learned.

The Blair Lee tract, of approximately 10 acres, with a frontage of 345 feet on the south side of Bircher street, in the northwestern industrial district, was purchased by the Moloney Electric Co., with plans for a transformer and distributing plant involving an initial expenditure of $1,000,000. Negotiations for the site were handled by the Mercantile Trust.

To Build Transformers.

As was told in the Post-Dispatch, the American Brown-Boveri Electric Corporation recently acquired control through stock purchase of the Moloney Electric Co. Brown-Boveri Electric also controls New York Shipbuilding Co., Camden, N. J.; Coudet Electric Manufacturing Corporation, Boston; Railway and Industrial Engineering Co., Greensboro, Pa.; Scintilla Magneto Co., Sidney, N. Y.

Larger transformers will be built at the Bircher plant and the well-known Brown-Boveri designs in sizes as large as 45,000 KVA. and for the highest voltages in this country.

With the new plant the Moloney company will be in a position to offer utilities and industrials of this country a complete line of large power transformers, embodying many original features not found in large and exceptionally high-tension transformers.

Downtown Sales.

The chief downtown features of the week were the purchase by the May Department Stores Co. of the buildings of the Dolph estate at the northeast corner of Seventh and Locust streets and the fee to the site of the Chemical Building at the northeast corner of Eighth and Olive streets.

Sale of the former, involving more than $500,000, was handled by the Chauncey P. Heath Real Estate Co. in connection with the National Bank of Commerce, executor of the Dolph estate and that of the latter, involving $450,000, by the Mercantile Trust Co.

The seller of the fee to the site of the Chemical Building was the Erskine Realty Co., and the purchaser was the Chemical Building Co., which owns the 16-story Chemical Building and which held the property under a 99-year lease. Paul Brown, vice president of the Mercantile Trust Co., is president of the Chemical Building Co.

The site has a frontage of 127 feet on Olive and 50 feet on Eighth street. Consideration for the Olive street frontage was at the rate of $3,529.40 a foot, which is a low valuation of the Olive street frontage at this point, according to present standards, notwithstanding the restricted depth of the site. Rental provided for in the 99-year lease, which was made many years ago, formed the basis for the purchase price, which is only a third of its present valuation.

The sale was on the basis of 4½ per cent return, which rate is more favorable to the seller than ordinarily prevails on downtown leaseholds.

Brown, with a sense of values, acquired his stock in this company a number of years ago at a very low price and has seen this property increase rapidly in value. It has been one of the most profitable of downtown office buildings from an income standpoint.

The Chemical Building Co., four years ago, purchased the fee to the ground adjoining on the north and now becomes the absolute owner of all the land covered by the Chemical Building.

ST. LOUIS 14TH IN BUILDING ACTIVITY, TENTH LAST YEAR

Permits Issued in City for January $172,000 Higher Than for Same Month in 1925.

DECLINE IN CHICAGO WASHINGTON, BOSTON

Survey Based on Reports From 420 Cities Shows Increase Compared With Small Loss in 1925.

January building permits in 420 cities promise a larger volume of building in many parts of the country this spring than was indicated at this time last year, according to the national monthly building survey of S. W. Straus & Co., made public yesterday. A gain of 9 per cent this January is comparable with a loss of 3 per cent last January.

St. Louis ranked fourteenth in volume of permits for January, 1926; Houston, Tex.; Miami, Fla., and Mt. Vernon, N. Y., having passed it in building activity. St. Louis stood tenth on the list of cities in January, 1925.

While the new year thus begins with a total volume greater than for any previous January, the general report is somewhat spotty. In many states the issue of permits was considerably less than during the same month last year.

The 420 cities cover; in the survey issued $269,610,715 of building permits as compared with $247,079,606 in January, 1925.

The 25 leading cities had a gain of 16 per cent, comparable with a very slight increase last January. The 25 leading cities also reported 68 per cent of the total.

At the same time these increases were not evenly spread among the larger centers of population. New York, Detroit, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle and the cities of the South, which are still holding their building activities, practically represent the gain for the country.

Chicago, Washington, Boston and other cities which were very active last January, this year showed decreases. The South, 78 cities in 12 states reporting, had a gain of 69 per cent. In the East 123 cities had a gain, but only on account of New York City's gain of 16 per cent, all boroughs participating. The property adjoins Carondelet Park and the Missouri Pacific Railroad. The property was sold to the Burdeau Real Estate Co. by Eugene W. Christy. The People's Motorbus Co. has entered into a lease for 20 years.

Christy, who represented both the People's Motorbus Co. and the Burdeau Real Estate Co., states that work will begin at once and that the building will be ready for occupancy about June or July.

Christy negotiated a deal a few months ago between the bus company and the Burdeau Real Estate Co. for a garage which is now under construction at Delmar and Rosedale avenues.

When these two buildings are completed it will give the bus company, according to reports of R. W. Meade, president, facilities to operate a double deck bus with the top covered. Their present garages, according to Meade, are not high enough to allow for this kind of service.

TRACTOR TOWBOAT TESTS MADE HERE

Gen. T. Q. Ashburn Sees Possibilities for Inland Waterways Development.

Tests were made last week before engineers, city and Government officials and invited guests, of a new caterpillar-tread tractor boat, designed by the Standard Unit Navigation Co. of St. Louis.

The tests were conducted privately in a public swimming pool at 3421 Cook avenue, a section of the building having been removed to permit entrance and floating of the craft, which is about 4 feet long. Here, under varying depths from 36 inches to eight feet, the boat was put through a series of trials, its traction power being recorded by a special rigging of ropes and scales.

Among the witnesses in recent days were Gen. T. Q. Ashburn, chairman and executive of the Inland Waterways Corporation; Willard W. Morse, newly chosen general manager of the Upper Mississippi Barge Line corporation; Mayor Miller and other city officials, and by a group of Canadians, headed by Mayor Cobb of Winnipeg, who are interested in the establishment of commercial navigation from Hudson's Bay to the gulf.

With the tests completed, President Carl J. Baer said, the company planned immediately to start production of towboats and barges. "The marine engineers of the Westinghouse Co. of Pittsburg approved the final tests last week," he said. "We expect to place at once orders for two fleets of 40 barges, with their complements of two towboats each. During this year we expect to be operating on the Missouri River, from St. Louis to Kansas City, including all intermediate points and landings, under a schedule of twice-a-week sailings."

Citizens' Committee Named.

The committee, which is called to meet in the Mayor's office at 10 a. m. tomorrow, consists of Baxter Brown, vice president, and P. W. Coyle, commissioner of traffic, representing the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce; Richard Moore, president, South St. Louis Business Men's Association; John F. Queeny, president, Monsanto Chemical Co.; Frank H. Wielandy, Blackwell-Wielandy Book & Stationery Co.; Capt. W. M. Mills, river pilot; John Hunter, engineer; J. P. Higgins, operating engineer, Mississippi-Warrior Service Co.; H. S. Sternberg, president Sternberg Dredging Co.; H. W. Geller, president Geller, Ward & Hasner Co.; John H. Gundlach, real estate operator, and Director of Streets and Sewers Brooks.

The towboat has two hulls, placed side by side, pontoon style. Between them is the power plant, operating an endless chain, with paddles attached. It may be likened to the caterpillar tread on a farm tractor, with paddles added so as to supply the thrust which propels the craft.

"LIV" MORSE SAYS MILLER CAN'T HURT WILLIAMS

E. Mont Riley, However, Avers Senator Is Beaten Man on World Court Stand.

The reaction of Mayor Miller's address at Springfield, Friday, denouncing Senator Williams and Dr. E. B. Clements, Republican National Committeeman from Missouri, was received with divergent views by two Western Missouri Republican politicians in St. Louis yesterday.

"Liv" Morse, of Excelsior Springs, one of the Missouri managers of the Frank O. Lowden campaign for the presidential nomination in 1920, with its attendant slush fund charges, said Mayor Miller's remarks would receive little response from Missouri Republicans, because 95 per cent of them opposed the World Court and commend Senator Williams' stand against it. He predicted Williams' election and said "those who have failed of reappointment will find it difficult to organize opposition to his nomination."

E. Mont Reily, former Governor of Porto Rico, who returned yesterday from a visit to President Coolidge, said "Miller didn't make it half strong enough." Reily views the practical political angle as usual and insists that Senator Williams has made his re-election impossible by alienating "Harding-Coolidge Republicans" because of his World Court opposition.

THIEVES LASHED IN DELAWARE

Four Negroes Struck 40 Times—Must Serve Year.

By the Associated Press.

WILMINGTON, Del., Feb. 13.—Four negroes convicted of larceny were given 10 lashes at the Newcastle County Workhouse today. Snow covered the open yard and ashes were scattered around the base of the whipping post. As each man stood at the post and grasped the manacles on the sides the Warden read the court sentence and then applied the lashes with the "cat o'nine tails" which is still used in Delaware.

They also must serve a year in the Workhouse. The whippings are public, but there were only two spectators today.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Feb. 13.—Twelve persons were injured today when an elevator cable broke in the Farr Hotel, dropping the cage three stories to the basement. They will recover. A majority of those hurt were socially prominent women of Huntington.

IMPORTS BIGGER THAN EXPORTS IN JANUARY

Balance of Trade Against U. S. by $15,000,000, Official Report Shows.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The balance of international trade swung against the United States during January. The country's imports totaled $414,000,000 and its exports only $399,000,000.

The import total as compiled by the Commerce Department was higher than in any other month for years. Exports represented a decline from the December total, which was $468,270,706, and were also below the totals of exports during several other recent months. In January, 1925, the month's trade gave the United States a favorable balance of $100,277,000, compared with the unfavorable balance of $15,000,000 for January of this year.

Department experts were unwilling to go on record as to the exact meaning of the swing. Eventually some of them have expected an unfavorable balance to be recorded due to the great current of American investment flowing abroad which requires the return of interest, which must be paid in goods. At the same time, however, it was pointed out that there are many temporary movements in trade which might cause an alteration in exports and imports for a single month.

Among these are listed the present high price of rubber, one of the raw materials which American industry must secure abroad. During January, 1926, the rubber takings of the United States represented a value twice as great as during January, 1925. Secretary Hoover has explained that there are nine semi-monopolies abroad engaged in pushing up prices of a commodity supplied by a single country.

As to the decline in the value of American exports the difference in the January figures from those of other recent months was not so great as to cause concern. American cotton and copper have been moderate in price for world consumers and the automobile trade has been reducing prices sharply in recent months.

Although the facts cannot be fully disclosed until the final reports come in it is considered possible that the American exports for January in quantity were as great or greater than other months, although their value in dollars was smaller.

The Wonderful Stories of "OZ"

by L. Frank Baum

The Metal Monarch, King of the Gnomes

SO ALTHOUGH still afraid, Ruggedo nerved himself to creep back along the path of the entrance, and when he arrived there he saw the six eggs lying in a row just before the arched opening.

At first he paused a safe distance away to consider the case, for the eggs were now motionless. While he was wondering what could be done, he remembered there was a magical charm which would destroy eggs and render them harmless to gnomes. There were nine passes to be made and six verses of incantation to be recited; but Ruggedo knew them all. Now that he had ample time to be exact, he carefully went through the entire ceremony.

But nothing happened. The eggs did not disappear as he had expected; so he repeated the charm a second time. When that also failed, he remembered, with a moan of despair, that his magic power had been taken away from him and in the future he could do no more than any common mortal.

And there were the eggs, forever barring him from the Kingdom which he had ruled so long with absolute sway! He threw rocks at them, but could not hit a single egg. He raved and scolded and tore his hair and beard, and danced in helpless passion, but that did nothing to avert the just judgment of the Jinjin, which Ruggedo's own evil deeds had brought upon him.

From this time on he was an outcast—a wanderer upon the face of the earth—and he had even forgotten to fill his pockets with gold and jewels before he fled from his former Kingdom!

After the King had made good his escape, Files said to the dragon in a sad voice:

"Alas! why did you not come before? Because you were sleeping instead of conquering, the lovely Rose Princess has become a fiddle without a bow, while poor Shaggy sits there a cooing dove!"

"Don't worry," replied Quox. "Tititi-Hoochoo knows his business, and I had my orders from the Great Jinjin himself. Bring the fiddle here and touch it lightly to my pink ribbon."

Files obeyed and at the moment of contact with the ribbon the Gnome King's charm was broken and the Rose Princess herself stood before them as sweet and smiling as ever.

The dove, perched on the back of the throne, had seen and heard all this, so, without being told what to do, it flew straight to the dragon and alighted on the ribbon. Next instant Shaggy was himself again and Quox said to him, grumblingly:

"Please get off my left toe, Shaggy Man, and be more particular where you step."

"I beg your pardon!" replied Shaggy, very glad to resume his natural form. Then he ran to lift the heavy diamond off Tik-Tok's chest and to assist the Clockwork Man to his feet.

"Ma-ny thanks!" said Tik-Tok. "Where is the wick-ed King who want-ed to melt me in a cru-ci-ble?"

"He has gone, and gone for good," answered Polychrome, who had managed to squeeze into the room beside the dragon and had witnessed the occurrences with much interest. "But I wonder where Betsy Bobbin and Hank can be, and if any harm has befallen them."

"We must search the cavern until we find them," declared Shaggy; but when he went to the door leading to the other caverns he found it shut and barred.

"I've a pretty strong push in my forehead," said Quox, "and I believe I can break down that door, even though it's made of solid gold."

"But you are a prisoner, and the chains that hold you are fastened in some other room, so that we cannot release you," Files said anxiously.

"Oh, never mind that," returned the dragon, "I have remained a prisoner only because I wished to be one," and with this he stepped forward and burst the stout chains as easily as if they had been threads.

But when he tried to push in the heavy metal door, even his mighty strength failed, and after several attempts he gave it up and squatted himself in a corner to think of a better way.

"I'll o-pen the door," asserted Tik-Tok, and, going to the King's big gong, he pounded upon it until the noise was almost deafening.

Kaliko, in the next cavern, was wondering what had happened to Ruggedo and if he had escaped the eggs and outwitted the dragon. But when he heard the sound of the gong, which had so often called him into the King's presence, he decided that Ruggedo had been victorious; so he took away the bar, threw open the door and entered the royal cavern.

Great was his astonishment to find the King gone and the enchantments removed from the Princess and Shaggy. But the eggs were also gone and so Kaliko advanced to the dragon, whom he knew to be Tititi-Hoochoo's messenger, and bowed humbly before the beast.

"What is your will?" he inquired.

"Where is Betsy?" demanded the dragon.

"Safe in my own private room," said Kaliko.

"Go and get her!" commanded Quox.

So Kaliko went to Betsy's room and gave three raps upon the door. The little girl had been asleep, but she heard the raps and opened the door.

"You may come out now," said Kaliko. "The King has fled in disgrace and your friends are asking for you."

So Betsy and Hank returned with the Royal Chamberlain to the throne cavern, where she was received with great joy by her friends. They told her what had happened to Ruggedo and she told them how kind Kaliko had been to her. Quox did not have much to say until the conversation was ended, but then he turned to Kaliko and asked:

"Do you suppose you could rule your gnomes better than Ruggedo has done?"

"Me?" stammered the Chamberlain, greatly surprised by the question. "Well, I couldn't be a worse King, I'm sure."

"Would the gnomes obey you?" inquired the dragon.

"Of course," said Kaliko. "They like me better than ever they did Ruggedo."

"Then hereafter you shall be the Metal Monarch, King of the Gnomes, and Tititi-Hoochoo expects you to rule your Kingdom wisely and well," said Quox.

"Hooray!" cried Betsy; "I'm glad of that. King Kaliko, I salute Your Majesty and wish you joy in your gloomy old Kingdom!"

"We all wish him joy," said Polychrome; and then the others made haste to congratulate the new King.

"Will you release my dear brother?" asked Shaggy.

"The Ugly One? Very willingly," replied Kaliko. "I begged Ruggedo long ago to send him away, but he would not do so. I also offered to help your brother to escape, but he would not go."

"He's so conscientious!" said Shaggy, highly pleased. "All of our family have noble natures. But is my dear brother well?" he added anxiously.

"He eats and sleeps very steadily," replied the new King.

"I hope he doesn't work too hard," said Shaggy.

"He doesn't work at all. In fact, there is nothing he can do in these dominions as well as our gnomes, whose numbers are so great that it worries us to keep them all busy. So your brother has only to amuse himself."

"Why, it's more like visiting than being a prisoner," asserted Betsy.

"Not exactly," returned Kaliko. "A prisoner cannot go where or when he pleases, and is not his own master."

"Where is my brother now?" inquired Shaggy.

"In the Metal Forest."

"Where is that?"

"The Metal Forest is in the Great Domed Cavern, the largest in all our dominions," replied Kaliko. "It is almost like being out of doors, it is so big, and Ruggedo made the wonderful forest to amuse himself, as well as to tire out his hard-working gnomes. All the trees are gold and silver and the ground is strewn with precious stones, so it is a sort of treasury."

"Let us go there at once and rescue my dear brother," pleaded Shaggy earnestly.

Kaliko hesitated.

"I don't believe I can find the way," said he. "Ruggedo made three secret passages to the Metal Forest, but he changes the location of these passages every week, so that no one can get to the Metal Forest without his permission. However, if we look sharp, we may be able to discover one of these secret ways."

"That reminds me to ask what has become of Each of the above objects may be defined by a word of seven letters. Queen Ann and the Officers of Ooogaboo," said Files.

"I'm sure I can't say," replied Kaliko.

"Do you suppose Ruggedo destroyed them?"

"Oh, no; I'm quite sure he didn't. They fell into the big pit in the passage, and we put the cover on to keep them there; but when the executioners went to look for them they had all disappeared from the pit and we could find no trace of them."

Answer to Last Week's Puzzle

THE "SHERLOCK HOLMES" PROBLEM

"I will tell you how I know that you heard a window being opened," said the great detective. "As soon as you showed me the phonograph I noticed that a cigarette was on the stand and the smoke was blow out into the hall. It couldn't have been your c ette, for you had been out. Therefore the perso your apartment had put it down, and when you sta out must have been by the fire escape. Therefore smoke was blowing in the draft from the open dow, and it was the opening of the window that heard.

Now as to his description. He was a left-handed about six feet tall—possibly a little taller—above average height, at any rate. Also, he was an rant fellow, with very little education. Moreover, had been in your employ at one time or another, you discharged him.

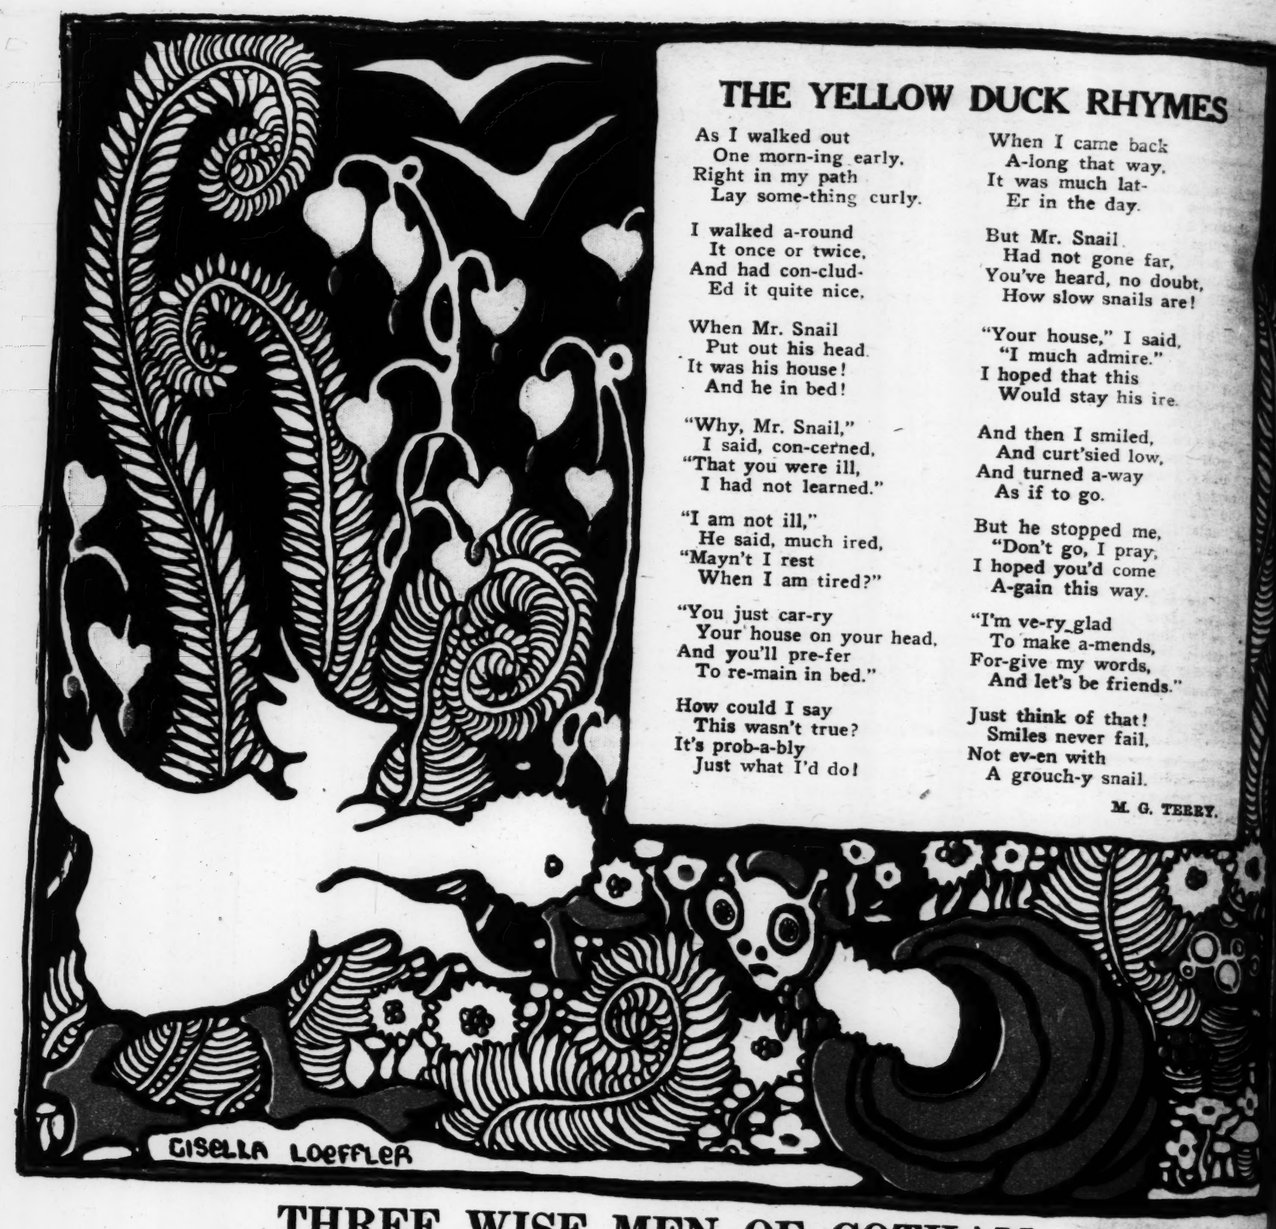
Don't look astonished. Note the partially written age on the wall. A man writes naturally at the d of his eyes. That floor lamp you have is, I pre-, of standard size. That would make his eyes to about five feet eight inches above the floor, his height about six feet. But there is more. He d over the chair to write, and his foot slipped on rug. See how it is pushed back. He threw out his hand to save himself and struck it against the wall. The print is of a right hand. He was holding the pencil in his left. Therefore he was left-handed.

"He might have written with his left hand to disguise his handwriting, but look at the writing. It is the writing of an ignorant man—see the small I's—but it is not the irregular scrawl that a right-handed man writing with his left hand would make.

"He was about to write 'I said I'd get even.' Therefore he held a grudge against you. He must have been in your employ at one time or another, for he knew your habits. Note that your desk pad reminds you that it was lodge night; he knew you would be away that evening. Moreover, your clock points to a quarter of ten. He knew that you would be out till at least eleven, so he took his time. The cigarette shows that. But you returned unexpectedly and spoiled his plans.

"The heavy screwdriver was obviously used to force the door—you note that the lock is broken—and to wrench open the cashbox. I should advise you that a bank is a safer place than your room for valuables.

"Now if you will tell me the name of an ignorant man, six feet or better in height, who used to work for you and whom you discharged after a somewhat violent scene, he will be apprehended at once. Simple, isn't it?"



THE YELLOW DUCK RHYMES

As I walked out
One morn-ing early,
Right in my path
Lay some-thing curly.

I walked a-round
It once or twice,
And had con-clud-
Ed it quite nice.

When Mr. Snail
Put out his head
It was his house!
And he in bed!

"Why, Mr. Snail,"
I said, con-cerned,
"That you were ill,
I had not learned."

"I am not ill,"
He said, much ired,
"Mayn't I rest
When I am tired?"

"You just car-ry
Your house on your head,
And you'll pre-fer
To re-main in bed."

How could I say
This wasn't true?
It's prob-a-bly
Just what I'd do!

When I came back
A-long that way,
It was much lat-
Er in the day.

But Mr. Snail
Had not gone far,
You've heard, no doubt,
How slow snails are!

"Your house," I said,
"I much admire."
I hoped that this
Would stay his ire.

And then I smiled,
And curt'sied low,
And turned a-way
As if to go.

But he stopped me,
"Don't go, I pray,
I hoped you'd come
A-gain this way.

"I'm ve-ry glad
To make a-mends,
For-give my words,
And let's be friends."

Just think of that!
Smiles never fail,
Not ev-en with
A grouch-y snail.

The Strange Varmint of Wind River Canyon

By FRANK A. SECORD

Herb stood trembling as with the palsy and made no attempt at all to use his rifle.

A couple of Eastern arrived at [illegible] Station, a little snuggled up to the base of [illegible] Mountain, in [illegible] of big wild game, [illegible] explained it. The [illegible] meant well, but they [illegible] to the wrong place [illegible] they unloaded at [illegible] several trunks containing a great array of camping stuff, ammunition, etc., besides short pants, golf stockings, little dinky caps with feathers for ornaments in the sides of them, and other articles which mountain folk had never heard of before.

As the two travelers trudged uptown from the depot every door along the street was filled with curious people, among whom were Jube and Jem Strong, two boy natives of the locality.

"Say, I'd like to go along as guide to that pair of easies!" Jube remarked. "They ought to be simple pickings from the looks of them."

"I'll say!" Jem observed, as he shaded his eyes to watch the passing of the strangers up the street to the hotel.

Later in the evening Jube and Jem Strong sauntered into the hotel just in time to hear the proprietor rattling off a lot of true and a lot of imaginary stuff to the guests. "Up Wind River way," Old Bogy was saying, "there are a powerful lot of bear and some mountain sheep. If you want to get right into a country where only big game stays, get into Wind River canyon, fellows!"

"How far is it from here?" one of the newcomers asked.

"Well, just as far as you want to go," was the answer. "Wind River canyon starts at the edge of town and extends something like a hundred miles to the northwest."

"And guides?"

"Guides!" exclaimed the man. "Anybody you can lay a finger on in this town is a guide to any pickings in this part of the world." Just then spying Jube and Jem Strong, the man continued. "The lads there might go with you."

And so it came to pass that Jube and Jem Strong were selected by the brothers Brown to guide them to Wind River canyon to the haunts of big game.

"There is only one thing that I don't like about Wind River canyon, after we get into the wilderness," Jube remarked next morning as the party made ready to start.

"What's that?" curiously inquired Herb Brown.

"Well, nobody has ever figured it all out, so far," mused Jube. "People claim they've seen a two-headed varmint that whistles like wind blowing through a crevice."

"Animal?" inquired the other Brown brother, Robert.

"Snake," laconically answered Jube, and both Easterners scanned him carefully. Herb noticed that Jem Strong displayed a slight twinkling of the eyes and immediately made up his mind that the lads were spoofing. He took a hitch at his trousers and gayly cried, "Forward!"

The first night out Jube made camp, while Jem started out to look around, as he said; and the Easterners laughingly asked him to beat the brush for the two-headed snake that whistled like wind blowing through a crevice.

"If I do meet it you'll see me coming back here just about three jumps ahead of myself and faster than you ever saw a two-legged galoot go!" called out Jem, disappearing among the brush.

It was a fine night, with a full moon. The heavens were cloudless and a myriad of stars gleamed from the big dome above, which resembled a bowl filled with sparkling gems.

After the evening meal Herb Brown, tired, announced that he would turn in and advised all the others to do the same, in order to get a good, fresh start on the morrow.

"Why!" cried Jube Strong, "all of us can't sleep at the same time! Either Jem or I will keep watch during the first half of the night and then exchange."

"Two-headed snake get us, eh?" inquired Robert Brown, yawning.

"Might!"

Jem ambled into camp about that time. He reported likely bear and sheep hunting a little farther on, picked up his rifle, took up patrol at camp, as if it were just the natural thing to do, while Jube, without another word, rolled in his blankets.

Herb and Robert Brown snored, and as soon as their "bugles" set up a duet, Jube hopped up from his blankets, threw a clod at Jem, seated on a rock nearby, also fast asleep—for the patrol business was a fake—and the lad quickly rose. Carefully the boys edged away from camp, carrying with them a small bundle.

Just beyond the tent lay a patch of thick underbrush mixed in among a bewildering lay-out of rocks and boulders. From the bundle, when the center of the brush was reached, Jube worked over an object which suddenly broke the still of the vicinity with a noise like the report of a gun. Down the dizzy, snake-like, winding canyon the noise reverberated, echoing time after time, until the two boys scowled, fearing their charges would waken.

"Gosh!" grunted Jem, "if a fellow'd yell tonight he'd hear his voice a million times, I believe!"

"Yes, and have a care, will you!" Jube growled. "If you make that noise two more times, there'll be no snake tonight!"

Long the boys figured, schemed and worked. When their task was finished Jube once more simulated sleep, Jem took up his fake patrol and only the "bugles" of the brothers Brown stirred the silence.

About 3 a. m. Jem Strong whooped loudly, his gun repeated several times and the lad was soon found in the midst of camp, wild-eyed and gasping.

"What's the rip, old scout?" sleepily inquired Herb Brown.

Jem continued to swallow lumps and gasp, unable, it seemed, to speak a word. Jube was up on one arm and wide awake, but when Jem finally managed to utter one terrible word, "Snake!" Jube sprang to his feet in an instant and, urging Herb and Robert to arm themselves, cautiously peered from the tent.

Jem cowered in a corner. "I," said he, "saw it! The varmint peeked at me over the rocks and brush. I always believed, in my own mind, that the thing was an imaginary one, but now I know better!"

"Show us and we will know better, too!" Robert Brown laughed, but his voice was not that of a very brave man.

At the tent door-flap Jem and Jube pointed out to a thing silhouetted against the starlit sky, about fifty feet distant. A slowly wavering two-headed monster glared from a pair of angry eyes at the hunters. The monster showed about five feet of body above the underbrush and from its mouth a series of sparks were blown.

Robert Brown raised his rifle to take a shot at the thing, but Jem reached over to discourage the attempt, an unnecessary thing to do, for Robert's gun jammed at the first attempt to pump a shell into the breech, for this, the man's first call to action, brought with it a genuine case of "buck fever." Herb stood trembling and made no attempt at all to use his rifle.

The four adventurers gazed with awe, unable, it seemed, to take their eyes off the monster, which suddenly dropped out of sight and was soon no more. All the time the thing moved its head, snake-like, over the brush and boulders, a whistling sound as of wind being forced through a fissure of rock was heard. This added more terror to the sight of the horrible thing that had come out of the night from nowhere to look the campers over.

"Darn your Wind River canyon!" finally blurted Robert Brown. "I've enough of it. What'll we do?"

"Stay here and if it shows up again all of us will have to make mighty sure of our guns and do some good work or perish, as I see it!" exclaimed Jem Strong. "This is the last party I'll ever pilot up here, I bet, unless the snake is disposed of!"

"Do you believe it has left, or is hiding among the rocks?" Herb asked from between chattering teeth.

"From what we've heard, I believe it's lying in wait for us to come nearer," Jube answered. "Will we go? I guess not!"

Through the gray of the early dawn Herb and Robert Brown sat, just inside the flap-door of the tent, with rifles pumped to loading, across their knees. Jem and Jube pretended to be on the watch outside, but both lads secretly slept, seated on a couple of boulders.

Hoarse cries of nightbirds winging their way homeward wakened the the lads, who found the two city chaps still on guard.

Never did the rising sun look so good to the Browns, both of whom declared their intention of returning to Mesa and taking another route in an opposite direction, where nobody had ever seen any monsters.

"The worst of it is," solemnly spoke Jube, "how will we break camp and get away? The varmint may be close, yonder a ways, and it may be a dozen miles from this place. I don't know."

"Anyway," grunted Jem, "I suppose we take no more chances breaking camp than we'd take by staying another night, now that the thing has us spotted. I'm for a sneak, I am!"

"Guess you're right," Jube mused. "Well, let's get a move on. Robert and Herbert can walk around and kind of beat the brush to make sure the snake is not near, while you and I pull up stakes."

"Wha-a-at!" gasped Herb Brown.

"When this old brush gets beaten it will be by somebody else than yours truly Robert Brown—me, myself in person!" cried the other. "I'll help, if you please, but I have an invisible dead-line between myself and that patch of brush."

"For those kind words I thank you," giggled Jube Strong, but only he and Jem knew what he meant, which was that he was not inclined to see either of the chaps from the East investigate too closely the spot where the snake had been seen.

Folks at Mesa nudged one another when the expedition came back; and when Jube and Jem handed the hotel man a package, winking the while, that worthy chucked it under a counter and said nothing.

The package contained three rubber balloons, a couple of pieces of phosphorus and a flint and steel contraption, together with a long, slender sack-like cloth article.

The varmint of Wind River canyon was manufactured with the aid of the articles mentioned. On the blown-up balloons the lads stuck the bits of phosphorus for eyes; the balloons were fastened side by side on the end of the cloth arrangement, and between the balloons hung the flint and steel device. The air escaping slowly but forcefully from the rubber balloons blew the steel against the flint and caused the sparks which seemed to come from the demon's mouth, of which it had none at all. As soon as the wind was sufficiently out of the balloons they fell to the ground, and that's the way the snake ducked its head after surveying the surroundings.

The wind-like noises were the simplest arrangements of the layout, being caused by air escaping from the bags, for to the end of each was a common toy squeaky whistle.

Too Many Husbands?

They All Lived Together — the Ex-Husband, the Perennial Wife, and the Presiding Husband. Now This Happy Household Is Disrupted — and the Story of the Ambitious Attempt Can Be Told.

By a Post-Dispatch Staff Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—In this interesting age when mothers declare they can't control the daughters and the daughters declare they can't control themselves, something has happened which absolutely couldn't happen but did. One woman insisted that her first husband live in the same flat with herself and the second husband, who had won her away from the first husband, and she made it last for two and a half years—a geologic age under these strange and exotic circumstances.

Frances Hutter, nee Maloney, having at the tender age of 16 years married Ed Ruck in the cold city of Cleveland, did, some time in 1923, re-fall in love with her childhood sweetheart, one Jack Hutter, and then did she ask Ed Ruck to divorce her, which Ed Ruck did, whereupon she made marriage with Jack Hutter, the above-mentioned childhood sweetheart. But still did she feel so kindly toward the husband of the first part that she insisted to her new husband that her first husband must reside with them, inasmuch as he (the first husband) had indigestion. And she insisted to her first husband that he must reside with her and her new husband. And everybody agreed, and so for two and a half long years all did reside together. Until, in fact, early in the morning of January first, of this year, when Jack Hutter busted Mrs. Hutter in the jaw and took himself away. All of which occurred in the extremely cold city of Cleveland.

NOW let us go back to the mid-coca cola age of 1915. In the east end of Cleveland lived the Maloney family and not far away lived the Hutter family, while not a great distance from either lived the family of Ruck. Little Frances Maloney, aged 15, would pedal her bicycle down the pavement of the little-cottaged street on which she lived, a sweet smile on her face as she sailed under the green, green trees, for it was summer, and, much to everybody's surprise, Cleveland was warm. And seeing little Frances pedaling by, a thing of beauty and therefore, in the minds of the poets, a joy forever, Jack Hutter, aged 17, and Ed Ruck, aged 20, cast youthful and loving glances at her.

And now comes the first note of pathos. For Ed Ruck and Jack Hutter were pals, cronies, and at that time had sworn lifelong friendship to each other. Later it is believed they swore other things to each other, but that has nothing to do with this part of the story. Being pals and being in love with the same maiden was not conducive to the peace of mind of either Jack or Ed, nor was the situation an auspicious one for little Frances. For her admirers being pals, it was quite possible neither would care to propose marriage and thus break the heart of the other.

But Jack Hutter, being by nature more demonstrative and more forward, one day declaimed his love for Frances, and thereafter it became known in that part of Cleveland that Frances Maloney was Jack Hutter's gal. From that moment the trees became greener for Frances and Jack, and the lake breeze, blowing from whichever lake Cleveland is on, held for them a romantic caress. While for Ed Ruck, whose cardiac region was now badly affected, the lake breeze bore a bitter tang of disappointment. But he was very noble about it. Yes, he still loved Frances, and he still loved Jack. He did not deny his love for either, and he waved jealousy aside with a stern hand. But often, as Frances flitted by on her bicycle, he still cast toward her moving direction a lustrous eye, even if he did make some effort to hide his amorous glance; and he still played the ancient game of pool with his old pal Ed at the neighboring billiard parlor. So 1915.

And then one day in 1916 Frances jumped off of her bicycle and married—— No, you are wrong. She married ED RUCK!

WHAT means Ed Ruck used to accomplish his purpose are unknown. How he managed to steel his heart against his pal and swipe his gal is likewise a mystery. But he did it. And Jack Hutter was a sadder man, but there is nothing to show he was any wiser.

Now for six years Mr. and Mrs. Ed Ruck lived the customary married life, but as this story is not a tragedy it is unnecessary to go into that. Each morning Ruck went to work and each evening he returned to find his dutiful wife awaiting him. Sometimes they chanced to meet the friend of their childhood days, Mr. Jack Hutter, and when they did all were apparently glad to see each other. In 1920 Jack joined the army for a brief time, but he refuses to admit it was a melodramatic gesture.

Then one memorable day in the autumn of 1922, after Jack had retired from the forces of the United States, Jack and Frances met again. He was invited to call on the Rucks, and he did. He was met with the well-known open arms. And soon it became no strange sight to see Jack Hutter making his way to the Ruck home almost any night.

And Ed Ruck, tired from his day's toil, would stretch his arms toward high heaven, make a brave attempt to stifle an unbecoming yawn, and say: "Jack, old man, Frances has her heart set on going to the movies tonight. Sloria Gwanson is playing in 'Necking Wives.' Would you mind taking Frances to see it, because I'm all in."

And Jack would say sure, he would be delighted, and Jack is perhaps the first man on record in such a situation who really meant what he said. And so Frances and Jack would sally forth for to see Miss Gwanson model, with some such good-by from Ed as, "Don't trifle with my wife," ringing in their ears. And poor Ed thought he had accomplished a nice piece of humor.

Often did Jack take Ed's Frances to the cinema. And the oftener he took her the more his mind returned to the gal of his childhood days. Pretty soon so did his heart. And one evening he told Frances all about it. Whereupon Frances turned to Jack and told Jack she, too, had been giving grave consideration to those far-off days of 1915. As she worked over the breakfast dishes in the morning, out of the melancholy dishpan a charming vista of the old past would rise before her eyes. Once more she saw herself pedaling down that old-cottaged street, once more she saw her Jack as she passed the corner billiard parlor, shooting a mean game of pool, once more she heard the mellow words, "Frances Maloney is Jack Hutter's gal," ringing in her ears and reddening her face.

Then Frances and Jack would look at each other and go back home to Ed.

JACK'S calls on Mr. and Mrs. Ruck became more frequent. On such occasions as he did not find them at home, the Rucks having been so neglectful as to go out without notifying him, he would take himself to the home of Frances' mother to see if the Rucks were there. And if they were not there, he would just sit in the corner.

When Mrs. Maloney, all unsuspecting, would think his gestures of despondency were due entirely to lack of nourishment, she would ask Jack if he wouldn't like something to eat. But Jack would only shake his head and moan, and poor Mrs. Maloney very likely thought Jack had indigestion, too, just like her son-in-law.

Well, maybe Jack did have indigestion. He undeniably had heartburn, and heartburn comes from indigestion, and who knows but that scientists of the future will prove that love is nothing but a result of undigested food acting in an injurious manner upon the heart? For a year and a half Jack continued to suffer from heartburn. Frances was distressed with heartburn. And, of course, poor Ed Ruck had indigestion. So three hearts were burning as one.

Then, in the spring of 1923, with the trees green and the flowers abloom, the hearts of Frances and Jack burst into flame. And one day in June Frances threw her cards on the table. They were all hearts and Mr. Jack Hutter was the ace.

She told her husband that her love for Jack Hutter, that old love of her childhood days, had returned in all its glory; that there was no restraining it; that life would mean nothing to her unless she became immediately Mrs. Jack Hutter, and what was Ed Ruck going to do about it?

Ed Ruck looked at the little woman.

"Frances," he said, "I love you more than anything in the world. Frances, I will do anything to make you happy, for I love you more than anything in the world and will continue to so love you. If you care to, get—a—divorce."

"No, Ed," replied the little woman. "You have done nothing for which I could divorce you. Your affections toward me have not changed. It is my affections toward you which have changed. You get the divorce."

"No," said Ed gently and nobly, "you get the divorce."

"No," replied Frances quite as firmly, "you get the divorce."

As it was absolutely necessary for somebody to get the divorce, and as Frances wouldn't get it, the only gentlemanly thing for Ed Ruck to do was to get the divorce himself, which he did. In July, 1923, Mrs. Frances Ruck, that was, became Mrs. Frances (Jack) Hutter. First love, like other habits, had triumphed.

FORMERLY Frances Maloney; then Mrs. Ruck; then Mrs. Hutter. Now what?

JOHN R. HUTTER—"the childhood sweetheart," and second husband of Frances Maloney. Now being divorced.

And Jack and Frances moved into a flat and started life anew. And almost the first thing Frances said to Jack was: "Jack, I want Ed to live with us."

"What!" said Jack, and his surprise and exclamation were pardonable.

"I," said Frances, "Jack, want Ed to live with us. Now, Jack, you know how much I still think of Ed and you know how much you think of him. And you know mighty well that Ed has indigestion; you know very well that Ed isn't well and that Ed needs my attention. The poor boy, he has been so used to it."

"I know," replied Jack, "but"—

"But," said Frances, "think of what he did for us."

"Yes, I know, but"——mused Jack. "Oh, all right."

And so Frances and Jack went to see Ed and invited Ed to come and live with them. Did Ed sadly shake his head and burst into a sad melody—who ever had a better right to burst into that grief-stricken ballad, "The pal that I loved stole the gal that I loved; that's why we aren't pals any more"? No, Ed Ruck did nothing of the kind. He packed up and, with the aid of Frances and Jack, moved and was installed in the home of Mr. Hutter. Which was very fine, for he had gotten used to Frances' cooking. It was probably the best thing for his indigestion. And then it was very nice to live with people you had known all your life, especially if the lady of the house was your former wife and the gentleman was the boy you had always played pool with.

AND so things went right merrily along. It was nothing unusual to see Frances and Jack and Ed saunter out of the house of an evening and crowd into the Ford coupe—just whose Ford coupe it was will have to be decided by the court—and start away for a ride or for the cinema. And it was not at all strange to see a furniture van pull up to the Hutter home and unload pieces of fine furniture. And just who the furniture belonged to I would not like to say, for different versions there are as to who paid for it, who paid the most for it, and who still owes money on it. But things went along quite nicely until one day Jack and his wife had an argument, and Hutter says that Ed Ruck took the side of his landlady, i. e., his former wife.

This, on Ed's part, was not calculated to ease the feelings of Jack Hutter. There was then and there an argument; Ed up and left the place. Frances and Jack made up; Ed came back and once again everything was hotsy-totsy.

But, alas, it didn't remain so. Arguments became more frequent. Makings-up became less frequent. The Hutter house slowly but most certainly became divided into two camps—Jack Hutter on one side, Frances Hutter and Ed Ruck on the other.

And then, early on New Year's morn of this year, an argument grew into a battle, and Mrs. Hutter suffered a bust on the jaw, Jack Hutter administering the punch that knocked out the family triangle of husband, wife and husband-that-was. And Jack Hutter buttoned up his overcoat and left the house for good.

That was a bit too much to take even from a childhood sweetheart, not to consider a husband, Mrs. Hutter felt; so she took herself to an attorney and the attorney filed suit for divorce. And as it would be some time before the divorce case would be heard there was a hearing for maintenance at which the Judge granted Mrs. Hutter $7 a week for the time being. And the Court was so surprised at the situation of husband and wife and husband-that-was, that he did a bit of questioning to which Mrs. Hutter replied in this like:

"Oh, Jack complained about Ed living with us," said Mrs. Hutter. "Ed offered to leave, but I couldn't let him go out in the world alone. Then there were arguments and Jack began beating me. Jack acted brutal. Ed told me he couldn't stand it to see how Jack treated me, but I made him promise not to interfere.

"Your Honor, I don't want a divorce so I can marry Ed again. I want to be married again some day, when I understand men better, but not for years. I don't want to get married until I meet the man I love. I don't know what love is, I'll admit.

"Oh, no, I'm not sorry I divorced Ed. I've learned two lessons. But I still feel responsible for both boys. Oh, no, Your Honor, I don't want Jack put in jail for hitting me. I just want a divorce so I can have a chance of my own without all these mix-ups, and I want to go back to school."

But what does Jack Hutter have to say about all this? Jack Hutter has quite a bit to say. The writer discovered the gentleman, a tall wiry six-footer who smiled sheepishly. A pleasant fellow, he seemed, though a gentleman who looked like he could hit hard. Mrs. Hutter could probably tell more about that. And so Jack told his tale, with interjections on the part of his mother, whose interjections were none the less forceful because they bore a lusty German accent.

"Oh," related Jack nonchalantly, "I just got tired of having Ruck hanging around and taking her side. I threw him out twice, but when I'd get back home there he'd be again. You couldn't keep him out."

Mother Hutter: "No, you couldn't."

Jack: "I bought all the furniture. Cost me $700. Bought the victrola. There's still $20 due on it. But I'm not going to pay it. Bought the Ford. Or I gave her the money to buy the Ford. And she buys it under the name of Frances Ruck. How did I know how she bought it? I'd come home and slip her the whole pay envelope. Now she says Ruck was paying for the furniture and the Ford. Go over and ask the furniture man who was paying for the furniture. He'll tell you."

Mother Hutter: "He was too good to that girl."

JACK: "Well, we had arguments. It got so I couldn't please her. And Ruck had to stay there because she said he was sick. All he's got is indigestion. But she wanted him to stay and so it was all right at first with me. He was all right about letting her have a divorce so we could get married. You see we'd been in love when we were kids and still were. Well, the big fight happened New Year's morning. They both took sides against me and I told them to lay off. Then they came at me and I busted him and I busted her in the jaw and then I left for good. The Judge made me give her $7 a week and I gave it to her. I even gave her a pair of shoes the other day."

Mother Hutter: "He's always giving her something."

The Writer: "Maybe he's still in love with her."

Jack: "Don't you believe it. Me? Not me. All I want is a divorce. Then the other day, after I gave her the shoes, I met her on the street and we had another argument. And the other day I saw her in front of a picture show and we had another fight and I got mad at her and busted her. The sooner I get that divorce the more I'll like it. There's just one thing. I don't want to pay her alimony."

So the writer, quite convinced that Jack had "busted her," went to the home of Mrs. Maloney, to which place Frances had moved.

Let it not be thought that Mrs. Maloney wasn't as ardent in the defense of her offspring as was Mrs. Hutter. Let it not be thought she came not as gallantly to her child's defense, nor was her vehemence restricted by a lusty brogue.

Mrs. Maloney said, "Hmm. That Hutter! That snake! That snail! That worm! Comin' to my house when she's married to Ruck and moanin' and groanin' around like he had a pain in the stomach. Sitting in the kitchen with his head in his hands and refusin' a bite to eat. Foolin' all of 'em and foolin' even me at first, the snake!

"But don't you think he fooled me long. I'm too smart a woman for one like him. The snake! And then he goes and marries her. And the next thing he's beatin' her up. Uh, what I could tell did I have a mind to! But it's none of my business and that's why I'm sayin' nothin'. But let me tell you, this Ed Ruck now's a man for you. A fine, honorable man. But the other. Nothin' but a snake. The snake!"

AND so, ever in the pursuit of truth, the writer sought out Mr. Harry T. Hoffman, Cleveland attorney, barrister for Mrs. Frances Hutter, once Ruck, formerly Maloney.

And Mr. Hoffman was asked what about it and he replied that as far as he knew that was just about it only he was under the impression that most of the furniture had been bought by Ruck or had already been Ruck's and that the Ford was all Ruck's. I asked if such cases often occurred in the fair city of Cleveland and he said he didn't believe so, or anywhere else.

"And," said he, "the whole business is on the level, you have my word for it. That is the first thing I looked into before I took the case. I've never heard of a case anything like it. And this fellow Ruck's still in love with her."

"And," I said, "think of her being able to keep those two fellows together for two and a half years."

"Yes," said he, "she's a wonder. My hat off to her!"

And the attorney and his questioner were silent, musing on the greatness of this woman, and as I stared out the high window of this office building I seemed to see stalking in grave parade through the cold, gray Cleveland sky great leaders who had failed in their endeavors, but who before failing had done great things: Julius Caesar, Napoleon Bonaparte, George Remus—and Frances Hutter, once Ruck, formerly Maloney.

CAPTAIN BILL McDONALD, fearless Texas Marshal and Ranger

By HARRY R. BURKE
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

CAPTAIN BILL McDONALD looked over the secret service men to see if he thought them fit," wrote Colonel E. M. House in his "Recollections" now being published in the Post-Dispatch. "He told me that they did well enough, but he did not like their carrying .38's. When he said this to the secret service men they did not like it and replied: 'A .38 will kill a man all right.' 'Yes,' said Bill, 'if you give him a week to die in.'"

House had telegraphed to the veteran Texas ranger the moment he received word of the shooting of President Roosevelt: "Come immediately. Bring your artillery."

House wanted a man whom nothing, nobody could terrify. He got him. It was of record that only once had Bill McDonald ever been scared. And that was when he met the devil and the devil's wife one night as they perched on fence rails along a lonesome road. To the end of his life the captain insisted it was "the devil for sure" he'd seen and that though the second figure might have been a brother or a cousin, it certainly was of the devil tribe. He was only 15 then, and it's the only time recorded when Captain Bill was scared. Nine years later he was to become an officer of the peace; and for 40 years thereafter the boy whom "the devil" had scared was a fearless man-hunter. So intrepid was he that on the floors of Congress it was said: "Captain Bill McDonald would charge all hell with only one bucket of water."

COLONEL HOUSE'S anecdotes have revived interest in this extraordinary figure in the Southwest's history. Once the name of Bill McDonald was almost a household word in America, for reasons made plain on this page. But since his death, eight years ago, the passing of relentless time has dimmed McDonald's fame, especially among younger readers. From the time he started out in 1876 to find his own stolen cattle he got his man—always. One man or 200, it was the same to him. A measly no-count cattle thief or the United States Army! Captain Bill had a motto and developed a technic. The motto was: "No man in the wrong can stand up against a fellow that's in the right and keeps on a-comin'." The technic combined surety with speed.

He could pick cherries with a rifle ball, that man, and he had a knack—if his prey was running—of sending bullets singing about the fugitive's ears. Once in a chase like that he knicked an ear.

"Must a struck a stone and glanced a little," he said in complete disgust. "I aim to make 'em miss about three inches. They sing nicer when the don't really hit. Either that glanced off a stone or it's plum sorry shootin'. Hell's bells! It sorter makes me ashamed o' myself."

WHEN Negro troops, in sullen anger against Jim Crow laws, went rioting at Brownsville, Texas, Captain Bill found the culprits and arrested them almost despite the army—certainly in the face of the unwillingness of the army officers to co-operate. A quarrel between state and nation seemed imminent. Washington had issued orders to remove the Negro troops. Captain Bill would not let them move, despite the demand of the Brownsville officials, who feared more trouble. He was forced to bow inevitably to the orders of Governor Lanham, but alone he kept the troops in Brownsville over night.

The frightened citizenry had called to the Governor for the head of this intrepid ranger. One of their leaders was Judge Stanley Welch. Shortly afterward, at Rio Grande City, Judge Welch was assassinated as he lay sleeping. It was a political quarrel in which the Mexican faction was concerned. Governor Lanham sent McDonald to the scene. "Be conservative," he warned.

The Mexican factionists undertook to ambush the veteran ranger. He, with four men, was on the way to the scene of the crime. The assassins thought he had but two companions. They met him at 10 p. m. and opened fire in the moonlight, there on the country road—two of the Mexicans ambushed behind a fence; five others barring the roadway with their bullets.

In half a minute the battle ended. An hour after he had reached Rio Grande City, which was believed to be tumultuous and armed, Captain Bill sent this telegram to Governor Lanham:

"We were ambushed; four Mexicans dead, one wounded, two more captured; preparing to hold inquest. Everybody disarmed. Everything quiet."

But Captain Bill was worried. "Would Governor Lanham," he wondered, "think he hadn't been conservative?" He was asked:

"Did you kill any of them?"

"Well, I had the best place to shoot from"—he was standing up in the buckboard, a target for every gun—"and I felt as if I could pick the buttons off their coats."

"But did you really hit any of them?"

"Oh, hell! I don't guess I missed many."

FIGURATIVELY there were notches in his gun. He didn't mark them. He didn't boast them. Besides his speed in the draw he had a quick knack of disarming his foes. Usually there wasn't shooting because of that. How he did it he could not explain. A sort of sleight-of-hand almost, a quick trick—the shooting wrist had been seized, the gun had dropped.

But sometimes he wasn't close enough and they shot it out. Sheriff John Pierce Matthews of Childress County committed suicide that way.

Captain Bill knew of Matthews before he added that name to the John Pierce that had been his originally. The Childress Sheriff was not unfriendly to certain criminals wanted by Captain Bill. The two had had a brush of words when Matthews spoke insultingly to Governor Hogg of Texas in McDonald's presence. The Sheriff oiled up his gun. He practiced on the draw.

He knew the quickness of Bill McDonald's trigger. He knew the accuracy of the ranger's aim. So the Sheriff of Childress County bought a thick plug of tobacco and a heavy-bound leather note-book and wore them in a pocket over his heart.

The first brush came when McDonald sought to take a prisoner across Childress County and Matthews demanded the man and was refused. The Sheriff organized a posse. McDonald gave his prisoner a gun and told him to defend himself. They passed in safety. Matthews boasted he was going over to Quanah, Texas, where McDonald lived, and get the ranger.

"McDONALD FIRED for the third time. Matthews fell."

AND he went. He went with his gang. They followed him about in a group and after a bloodless re-encounter in which Captain Bill turned on them and they slunk away, they sent an emissary suing for peace. They were Greeks bearing gifts.

But Billy McDonald, fearing neither man nor hell, went out to meet them.

With Sheriff Matthews was Sheriff Coffer of Quanah. The Childress Sheriff manoeuvered the Quanah man between him and McDonald and fired at the ranger over Coffer's shoulder. The powder burned McDonald's face. Now, stepping around Coffer, McDonald shot twice, and both bullets buried themselves in the plug of tobacco above the heart of his enemy. A quarter would have covered the two holes.

McDonald shifted his aim to the right. Coffer dropped to the sidewalk. Matthews fired, the bullet penetrating Captain Bill's left shoulder and ranging downward two-thirds of the way through his body. McDonald staggered back, and Matthews sought to fire again, but the ranger had recovered. He shifted his aim to the right and with one hand fired as he seized his enemy's gun. McDonald fired for the third time. Matthews fell.

Meantime, Matthews' third bullet had shot through the ranger's hat and bullets from the guns of two of the Sheriff's friends had lodged twice in the ranger's left arm, while a third had paralyzed his right shoulder. Captain Billy cocked his revolver with his teeth, but the Matthews gang was in full retreat.

Captain Bill sat down against a lamp-post. "I think I'm a dead rabbit," he said. So did the surgeons. But the wiry old ranger recovered and Matthews died, first sending a message to Captain Billy. "I'm only sorry that I can't see you and apologize."

AS A DEPUTY SHERIFF, a special ranger and a Deputy United States Marshal—for such men in those days were so rare that the services of Bill McDonald, then Deputy Sheriff of Hardeman County, had been drafted by the State of Texas and the United States in an effort to exterminate "bad men"—McDonald went outside his county and outside his state if need should carry him. He had broken up the bad gangs in his home county. He had driven to cover the outlaws of that No-Man's Land, which on the maps of the 1880's appeared as a part of Indian Territory but was claimed by other states as well. And now, up in the Indian Territory things were going on that called him there. The Cherokee Strip was full of ranchers. But they were, many of them, ranchers who frequently went out on a "scout." And their ranches were the ports for missing cattle, while they, themselves, did not hesitate to turn a hand if need be to train robbery and bank holdups.

Into "The Strip" came a peach-tree peddler—a nursery man, taking orders for fall delivery. He was tall, thin, muscular, with wide, alert ears, quiet, steady blue eyes that had the look of distance in them, and a nose as determined as an eagle's beak. White of hair he was, quiet and benevolent of manner, and he liked to laze around and talk in the soft drawl of a Mississippian. He had a persuasive way and he sold lots of peach-trees, and in words he would have used "he got an earful."

Spring came—for he had visited the ranchers in the fall, spending some weeks among them. And with the spring came time for delivery of the trees.

BILL McDONALD went to Guthrie, Oklahoma, and swore out warrants for eight men—men who, according to his affidavits, were guilty of anything from cattle-rustling to railroad hold-ups, from horse-stealing to murder. These men lived in "The Strip." Their homes were on Sand Creek, near Guthrie. Guthrie knew them. When Bill asked for volunteers to go with him to Sand Creek and get the men he was told he'd better take a company of soldiers.

No help from Guthrie. McDonald wired his chief, United States Marshal Walker. Walker told the other deputies they were safe in going with Bill. But they wouldn't go.

"I'd fire every mother's son of 'em," said Bill, "if I had as sorry a bunch of fellers working for me. Give me a hack and a man who's got the nerve to drive, if there's such a man in this town, and I'll bring back that Sand Creek gang alone."

They thought it was bluff. But Bill got his driver and went.

IT WAS at dawn he drove up before the cabin of the leader of the Sand Creek gang. The hack and its driver stayed at a safe distance. Bill hammered on the door. A woman opened it. She saw the ranger's rifle and signaled to a man in bed. But before that man could reach his gun Bill had him covered. "Drop it, or you're dead," he yelled and the other's weapon dropped. Bill slipped the handcuffs on his prisoner and shackled him to a seat in the big three-seated hack.

"This is the first delivery," said the peach-tree man to his erstwhile customer. "We're going to drive on from here and get the rest."

The second man was alert. He sprang on his horse as Bill McDonald approached. They raced for it. Two bullets singing about his ears stopped the fugitive. Up went his hands. McDonald handcuffed his second peach-tree purchaser. He took him to the hack.

"Hello," cried the first of the budding orchardists, "have you been buying peach-trees, too?"

Shots halted the third man. The fourth, like the first, was surprised. One after another Bill McDonald took his eight—and another, a "bad man" who was visiting his brother in the Sand Creek Country, was picked up and carried along for good measure. McDonald had stalked his men in meadow or brushland, like the hunter he was. He had kept his hack with its increasing burden too well to the rear to satisfy the driver who wanted to see the fun. And he drove back to town with his captives. Deputies volunteered now to go with him on another expedition.

"But you're too slow," said the peach-tree man. "My deliveries are all made."

UP IN San Sabra County, Texas, was a murder society. In 10 years it had killed 43 men. It had grip, passwords, signals. It was a power in politics and in business, too. Originally it had been organized as a Vigilance Committee. Now it had degenerated until it sought to drive from the country with threats of death, anyone whose property it coveted; to assassinate anyone who opposed its rule; to kill those who ran for office without its consent. Its meeting place was a small lake hidden in a fold of the hills—the Buzzard's Water Hole, the lake was called.

Billy McDonald, then a captain of the rangers, was sent into San Sabra County. He wasn't welcome. Officers of the law opposed him. There were threats of death. He moved his half a dozen rangers in.

The leader of the Buzzard's Water Hole gang was Bill Ogle. Ogle didn't live in town. But he came in to look around when he heard that Captain Bill was on the job. McDonald followed him into a store where Ogle was surrounded by his henchmen. The captain had been warned he would be killed—sure.

"Ogle," he said, "I want to talk with you outside. I want to say some things you might not want your friends to hear."

It was a new, a strange, a surprising method of approach.

They walked out into the blazing sun and stood in the sands in the middle of the street.

"Ogle," he said, "you're a murderer and I'm going to hang you. That's what I came here for. I am not afraid of you or of your gang. You are cowards and only shoot from ambush. I'm going to break up that gang if I have to send every man to the gallows to do it. And I'm going to begin with you."

It was a long speech for Captain Bill. Under the glitter of his eyes Ogle began to sweat. Perspiration poured from his face. Before the captain had finished he had wilted and fallen to the sands.

"Get up," said McDonald. "Have you got a gun?"

"No, sir."

"Well you'd better get one before you start hunting for me," said McDonald and turned on his heel.

HE got a warrant and Ogle was arrested. Rangers were sent to guard the jail. The town feared battle. Rumors said the murder clan would meet at Buzzard's Water Hole that night and invade the town.

But when night fell the rangers were riding. At the home of every known member of the Buzzard's Water Hole gang they stopped. "Hello—hello, hello," they called. It was the society's signal for a rendezvous.

To the doorway the member would come.

"Are you going to the Buzzard's Water Hole tonight?" a ranger's voice would call.

A stranger! A stranger! And he knew the secret signals!

"No--o-o-o-o!" the astounded member would frantically protest.

"All right. Just wanted to know."

They didn't go that night. They never went again. The night-call "put the fear of God" in their hearts as the Texan would say. Who had betrayed the secret? How much had been betrayed?

One member of the gang died with fear—but only after he had confessed the truth. Ogle was convicted of murder and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. The rule of the gang was ended. Decent citizenry came out of hiding and asserted itself. The old gang was wiped out politically at next election. The murders ceased.

THE surface of the story of Captain Bill McDonald is but scarcely scratched in the tales thus told. How he solved the Conditt murder mystery, fastening the guilt upon those who had slain a woman and four children; how he made cow-stealing unpopular in the Panhandle; how he captured Kid Lewis and the Wichita Falls bank robbers; how he ferretted out the men who lynched the Humphreys family of a father and two sons and brought them to justice; how he discovered the guilty Negroes in the Brownsville riot—these may not be told here now. But they are authentic stories, and the stuff folk-tales are made of. No wonder Bill McDonald was reputed to bear a charmed life. Ignorant and superstitious bad men got to believe no bullet would kill him.

And there is the tale of how, single-handed, he found the Reece and Townsend factions in battle array in the town of Columbus—100 men, plainsmen and feudists, armed and determined on either side—and how he went alone to his task and disarmed them all, taking his gun away from the only man who refused to give the weapon up. That ended the Reece-Townsend feud.

THERE might be stories told of how he hunted with Roosevelt—a "hell-roaring Democrat," as Captain Bill had said, who didn't want the job, but came back from it the President's friend: of how he was body-guard to President Wilson in the 1912 campaign, and of how he served as United States Marshal of Texas as the result of that President's gratitude to him.

Roosevelt was not ungrateful, either, but he had no political job for the "hell-roaring" Democrat. But when T. R. again became a private citizen he wanted Bill McDonald's company on his famous African hunt.

McDonald, though proud of the honor, would not go. For the veteran ranger knew that not even in Africa is there sport that is equal to the hunting of men.

"I'm GOOD!"

That Was His Idea—And It Carried Him From a $25.00 a Week Job to a Career Which Netted $200,000 a Year. The Remarkable Story of the Late Walter Dean Goldbeck of St. Louis

JASCHA HEIFETZ, celebrated violinist, viewing the portrait Goldbeck (at right) has just painted of him.

"AND HE SANG them a ballad despite their shouts of 'the bag of wind's at it again'; he sang it so well they were ashamed." (Drawn by W. A. Byrnes who was present at this episode of Goldbeck's lively life.)

MISS ELIZABETH NORCOTT, an interesting portrait by Goldbeck.

By JULIUS KLEIMANN

Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

HERE'S the story of a St. Louis painter who didn't believe in the "garret theory" of art. As the gentleman might have said himself, for he often twisted his lips in pert and vigorous American, he couldn't see himself shivering under the frosty eaves, his sustenance consisting of a boiled potato, a boiled potato and a boiled potato, provided he had the necessary coin to drop in the gas meter so the potatoes might be boiled. This painter wanted money. So he might spend it. And how he got money, sometimes as much as $200,000 a year, through the medium of his art, is proof that this man was more than able along those lines which led to the fame of the late Mr. Barnum.

Walter Dean Goldbeck died last October, only 43 years old. But he lived long enough to make a name for himself as one of the country's leading portrait painters, and long enough to make his fortune, throw it away in great chunks, go broke, and be well on his way to collecting another fortune before he died. He was an artist, and with it he was a showman, and he put himself over with the tricks of the showman's trade. And that is the way he got his first St. Louis job, for he was born here and it was here he first came into the vigor of his talent.

Goldbeck, a brief drawing experience in Chicago behind him, returned to this city in 1904, when he was 22 years old, and entered the night class of the old St. Louis School of Fine Arts, then at Nineteenth and Locust streets. There he made friends with another student and his new found friend told him he was employed as an artist at an engraving shop. His pay, he said, was $2.50 a week.

"I believe I can do that kind of work," said Goldbeck. "Tell me more about it."

So his friend told him more about it, and Goldbeck sat down and made several drawings of the type the engraving shop used and wanted, took his samples to the man in charge of the shop's art department, and talked himself into a job. And the salary he got for himself was just ten times as large as his friend's. But a short time before that the new commercial artist had been daubing at Chicago billboards.

THOUGH the fine art of billboard painting had not been Walter Dean Goldbeck's first experience with the brush or pencil. His first artistic talent was shown when a small boy in Chicago, where he so excellently forged his father's signature on notes excusing his absence from school that it was months before it was discovered that young Walter had been playing truant. The discovery led to the boy's immediate expulsion.

Now he did not become a sign painter because sign painting was the one thing he wanted to do in life. He took up sign painting because he wanted to paint, to paint anything, and he felt he must get into some kind of painting that was remunerative. So he balanced himself on ladders and walked scaffolds for a few months to bring art to Chicago's billboards, and then found employment as an advertising artist. At which employment he stayed a brief time, and then took himself to this city.

He had never had any art instruction, so he entered the School of Fine Arts night class. He was put in "elementary antique," the lowest class that existed. And the first night he told the director of the school, Edmund H. Wuerpel, who still holds the same place, that Wuerpel was wrong and Goldbeck was right.

Goldbeck and several other students were in Wuerpel's office, and Wuerpel was questioning them. Goldbeck informed the director he would like to enter the life class, the class in which students drew from living models and did not devote their art to reproductions of apples and vases.

"Have you," asked Wuerpel, "ever drawn from life?"

"No," replied Goldbeck. "But I have drawn figures. Drawn them from memory."

"Very bad," said Wuerpel. "Very bad!"

Goldbeck was not disturbed by the eminence of the director, by his positive utterance, nor by the gentleman's beard.

Instead he replied, "On the contrary, very good. V-e-r-y good!"

Goldbeck attended the class for two or three months. That is the only art school instruction he ever had.

THE engraving shop that Goldbeck started out in was in those days something of a Sleepy Hollow. The windows were dusty and tired looking and the artists, if not dusty, took things so quietly and leisurely that they seemed as much in need of sleep and a brushing up as did the windows. And their time-taking maneuvers with their brushes indicated they were getting their rest between the brush strokes.

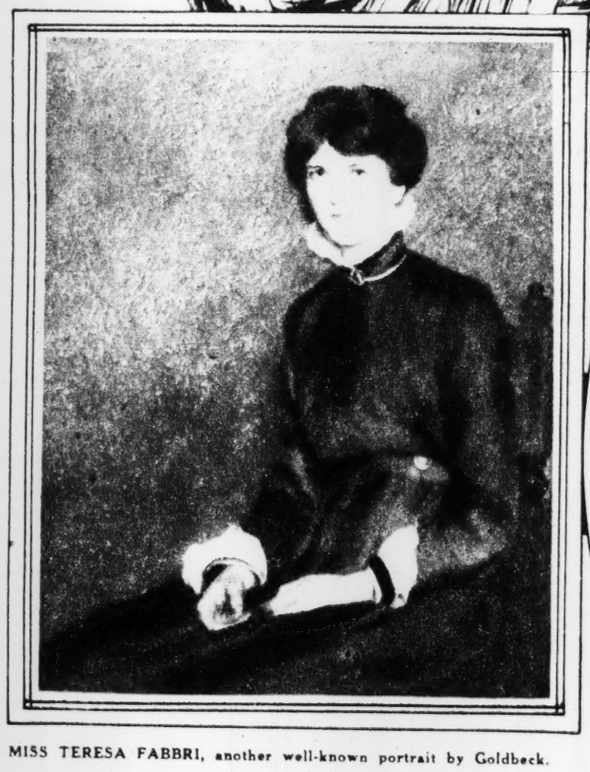
But things changed when Goldbeck entered. The first morning he came in he took the kitchen table which had been given him for a drawing board and twirled it the length of the room. It struck the partition that separated the great artists of the place from the garden snake variety artists herded together in the big room. That pleased Goldbeck mightily.

"What the Hell!" shouted the great artists, sticking their heads out of their cupboard, registering action and indignation for the first time in years. And "What the Hell!" shouted the lesser Rembrandts, likewise showing animation. And then in chorus, "Who is this loud bird, anyhow?"

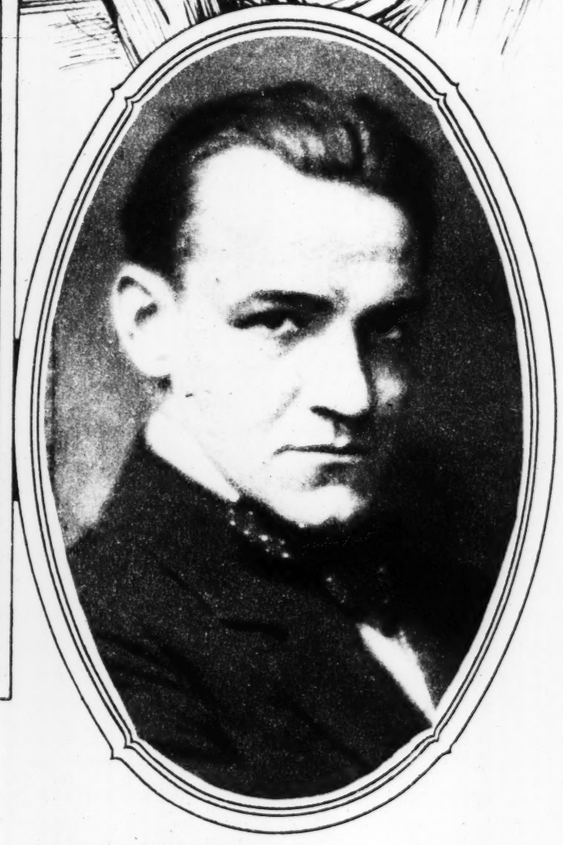
To which Goldbeck replied that he hadn't liked the position of his table and therefore had changed it.

And so it would appear that Walter Goldbeck was a rude and uncouth fellow, congenitally unfitted for the company of human beings and artists. But not so. That afternoon, when the day's work was over, Goldbeck turned to the young artist who had helped get him his job and said, "Kid," for his friend was several years younger than he was, a sort of infant prodigy, "did you see how I woke that gang up this morning? You know why I did it? Well, kid, an artist has got to have people talking about him. It doesn't make any difference what they say, just so they say something about him. And I intend to have people talking about me. I know when they quit talking that I'm through."

SO, CONSIDERING the actions of Walter Goldbeck on his first day at the engraving shop, the artists were more than a little prepared for any atrocity that might follow. They were not disappointed. Nor surprised when after a few days the new artist announced in a loud voice that "some of those New York guys had better watch out, for pretty soon I'll be pushing James Montgomery Flagg to hold his job making magazine covers."



MISS TERESA FABBRI, another well-known portrait by Goldbeck.



WALTER DEAN GOLDBECK, the artist who did all he said he would.

And it was no surprise one noon when Goldbeck entered the art room, and disturbing the fellows who were napping after their lunches, jumped up on somebody's table and, holding a piece of sheet music in his hand, let it be known that he was going to give them a real treat, as he had a wonderful baritone voice. And he sang them a ballad, despite their shouts of "the bag of wind's at it again;" he sang it so well that they were ashamed to tell him he hadn't sung it well, and to themselves they were forced to admit that the trouble with this wind bag Goldbeck was that he was always making extravagant boasts and always living up to them.

SO ONE day when he and his friend were walking up Olive street at lunch time and Goldbeck bought a copy of a New York paper and read that a large St. Louis printing firm was advertising for an expert color artist, his friend took it as a matter of course when Goldbeck informed him he was going to apply for the job even if he wasn't by any means an expert color artist.

"For," said Goldbeck, "if I'm the expert no one else will have any right to argue with me about my work, at first, anyhow, and by the time they get on to me, I'll have learned all I need to know about color work.

"Now, let's see. It took this paper a day to get here from New York and it would take me the same time. I know what I'll do."

So he hurried to his home, found a dilapidated old suitcase, filled it with old newspapers to give it weight, and walked into the printing plant that was so badly in need of an expert color artist from New York. He had just arrived, he told them. Of course, he'd had all kinds of color work experience. They'd only give him $45 a week? Well, he had expected more, but as he was in St. Louis he might as well make the best of it and take the $45, but how about a raise if he made good, as of course he would? Seventy-five dollars a week if he made good. All right, then he would stay.

In a very few weeks Goldbeck was drawing $90 every seven days. For he progressed at an astonishing rapidity, his work showed unusual excellence and the printing company congratulated itself on having put that ad in the New York paper for an expert color man.

DR. ROBERT Goldbeck, Walter's father, taught piano in St. Louis for several years and during that period the boy was born. Then the family moved to Chicago, to Europe and again to America, returning to St. Louis when the son had grown up, for the father had been asked to teach at the Strassberger Conservatory.

Walter, too, played the piano. But he wanted to paint and nothing else mattered. To paint well, and to be known so his painting might bring him wealth. He was indefatigable. At noon he would snatch a bite, then stretching out full length on the cobble stones of the levee, quite disregarding the winged color which he always affected, he would do pencil sketches of the scenes about him. He had no patience with any artist who took time for other things.

For on an afternoon, finding his friend, who had moved over to the printing firm shortly after he did, immersed in a book, he asked him what he was reading.

"Sherlock Holmes," said his friend.

"What the hell," Goldbeck burst forth. "What are you going to be, a detective? Go ahead and draw something."

AND Goldbeck began to be talked about. His St. Louis fellow artists all knew him. Some for a wind bag, some for an eccentric fellow, some for a boor, but they all admitted he had the bad habit of backing up all his bravura statements. Nor were there many who took offense at anything he said, it was not difficult to discover that beneath the man and his braggadocio was an extremely pleasant and kind fellow who was given to histrionic gestures.

"We both belonged to the old Missouri Athletic Association," says Adolph Siebert, a St. Louis commercial artist who was Goldbeck's boon companion during the portrait painter's St. Louis days, "and if Walter had an engagement to meet someone there, he would hide away in the most inaccessible nook in the club so it would be necessary to page him all over the place before he was found."

Goldbeck stayed in St. Louis for a little more than two years. Then he went to Chicago and continued to work at commercial art. He drew fashion ads and it is said he was largely responsible for the turn in the Middle West from advertising drawing that resembled wax models to drawing akin to portrait work.

From Chicago he went to New York. He wanted to do a portrait of some prominent person, some one whom people would know, and so knowing would stop to look. So he went straight to John McCormack, the tenor, and painted his portrait and then he painted Neysa McMein, the illustrator. This oil was placed in the window of a Fifth avenue art gallery, and a rich and socially prominent New Yorker, who was something of an art critic, seeing it one night, commissioned Goldbeck to do a portrait of his daughter. The portrait became a sensation at Bar Harbor.

And Goldbeck began painting the portraits of rich New York. This was in 1915 and that year he made $200,000. And in 1916 he made just as much. The man who had sat in the dusty engraving shop and bragged of his future had pretty well attained what he wanted.

And with all this money he made there was nothing to do but spend it. He and Mario Korbel, the sculptor, took a studio which cost them $30,000 a year. Quite in line with the plans the artist had made years before in St. Louis, when he was always preaching that a painter must have a magnificent and beautiful studio, it must be rich and costly, then he can charge his sitters anything he wants to.

Goldbeck bought a great house on Long Island and never spent a night in it. He bought a circus, 'way out in Arizona, because the circus was broke and someone had to keep the animals from starving. He financed a string quartet. Soon his money was gone. And he threw himself back into commercial painting, made some money, and took himself to Europe. He returned to New York in 1923, without money, and his friends had to help him along.

AND then again he was given commissions to do portrait work and these portraits were said to have been the best he had ever done. He was just preparing for his private exhibition in a Fifth avenue art shop when he was taken ill. It was found he suffered from an ulcer of the stomach, but he had put off consulting a physician until it was too late—in a manner said to be quite characteristic of the man.

The exhibition of his last portraits was held a few weeks ago—quite as years before the painter had confided to his first St. Louis artist friend: "The thing to have is a one-man show on Fifth avenue. Then they talk about you."

As Petty Officer in the Imperial German Navy Frank Weishaupt, lately become a St. Louisan, served through four and a half years of the World War. In the following article he relates his personal experiences in the gigantic Battle of Jutland. At that time (May, 1916) Germany had given up hope of a quick ending of the war on the Western Front and had turned her attention to the crippling of England's sea power and the landing of troops on English soil. To accomplish both these aims it became the German policy to dispatch her fleet to the North Sea at frequent intervals, in the hope of encountering the British Battle Squadron and destroying it—even at the cost of her own navy —so that the way would be cleared for invasion. It is at the time of these maneuvers that the following incidents take place.

By FRANK WEISHAUPT

FOR three years during the war a member of the signal staff of one of the largest German dreadnaughts, S. M. S. Koenig Albert, the writer had ample opportunity to notice how tiresome the situation became for the German crews who, eager to meet the English, were almost continually plowing the Northern Sea, but never saw the decidedly elusive enemy. The latter, it was later proven, operated a highly efficient and dependable spy system, thereby keeping accurately posted on the German movements.

At 2 a. m., on May 30, at Wilhelmshaven, the main base of our operations, a general alarm was secretly sent out by Admiral Scheer, chief of our fleet, on the receipt of news of British activities and, just as dozens of other times, we phlegmatically took our posts. My ship being laid up for repairs in the dry docks, I was ordered for special service aboard the B-98, a torpedo boat destroyer, and ninety minutes later was leaving the port together with the entire fleet, just as we had done time and again before.

Our destroyer flotilla, consisting of six modern boats of the three smokestack type originally built and intended for the Russian navy but at the outbreak of the war retained for our own fleet, was detailed to accompany the third battleship squadron, the elite of our fleet. The trip bore all the earmarks of all the others before; the only difference for myself being my ship—a destroyer this time instead of a battleship. In the usual fashion—the five battle cruisers about seventy to eighty miles ahead of the nucleus of the fleet, with the light cruisers and torpedo boats still farther ahead for reconnoitering purposes—we proceeded on a course due northwest.

A rather dreary day with a comparatively calm sea. We went through preparations for battle like clockwork, as hundreds of times before. The next morning found us traveling one of our regular ways north some two hundred miles away from Wilhelmshaven; we were expecting the signal to turn around for home just as usual. There were not even any Zeppelins along, which made the trip quite a minor event.

Then it happened.

SHORTLY after 4 p. m. (May 31) we received a radio message to the effect that our reconnoitering torpedo boats had sighted minor British forces, torpedoboats and light cruisers, some seventy miles away from us. A signal from the flagship dissolved our march formation by ordering every ship to proceed to the assistance of our cruisers as fast as possible. Our boats tore ahead at 40 miles an hour, a speed we never before had attained. On duty at the bridge, I had to hold myself with both hands to stand up against the wind, the tremendous force of the propellers at times raising the boat's bow out of the water to an angle of 45 degrees.

Working like ants, we got our torpedoes and ammunition ready. Ahead of us we heard the guns roaring, though we could see no ships. At 5:30 p. m., still going at top speed, we saw the lightning-like flares of the firing ships flash up on the horizon; but were unable yet to discern friend or foe. Half an hour later the first English shells arrived, throwing columns of water high up in the air. I took my stand on the bridge again, anticipating orders by signal from our cruisers.

"AS WE CHANGED OUR COURSE, an English shell hit the water 50 feet away from us. The resulting gusher nearly drowned us. I found myself in a corner of the bridge on the floor, soaking wet . . . For a moment I thought that the boat had been hit."

As we changed our course, an English shell hit the water 50 feet away from us. The resulting gusher nearly drowned us. Finding myself in a corner of the bridge on the floor beside the commander of the boat, both of us soaking wet, we looked at each other—thinking for a moment the boat had been hit—and then got up, observing our boat emerging from the water like a mad submarine.

Reaching our five big cruisers under Admiral Hippen, we found them engaged in a murderous battle with the English fleet. They were lined up alongside the enemy, pursuing a course due northwest with rapid changes of speed and direction. By this time conversation was impossible; so we stuffed our ears with cotton for protection against the indescribable uninterrupted roar of some 800 guns. Around us shells fell like hail.

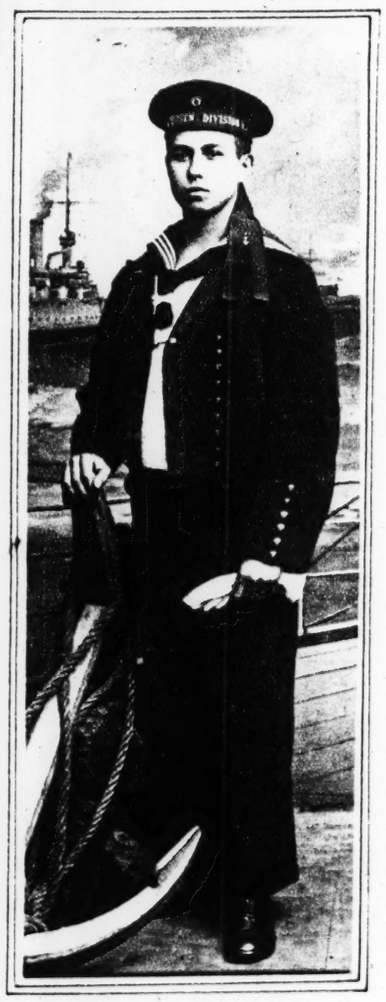
ONLY the big cruiser Derfflinger between my boat and the enemy saved us from being hit time and time again. Every gun of this great ship fired at top speed and, although some 50 feet distant, my boat violently shook and trembled at the discharge of each broadside of the cruiser's ten 10-inch guns. Realizing by now the tremendous numerical superiority of the British, I was straining my eyes looking for some sign of ships on the horizon due south—the direction where I knew our battleships to be. They alone could save us.

Suddenly the big cruiser Luetzow, just ahead of us, slowed down speed, thus forcing us and the following ships to stop. Moving backwards for a few minutes the great ship—then the pride of the German Navy—flew the signal, "Am unable to move."

Mystified as to the cause of this, our situation became extremely critical and only the big cloud of smoke now appearing in the South—our battleships—indicated relief for us, providing we could last long enough under the terrific fire of the English. They, undoubtedly, also saw our approaching assistance, for they now made every effort to destroy our few remaining ships before the larger part of our fleet arrived.

A literal hell of a cannonade and destruction followed. In an indescribable roar and a rain of shells I saw two of our light cruisers sink like rocks, my boat proceeding to fish out of the water as many of the crew as we could without stopping. The English concentrated their fire on our big Luetzow, which was now an easy target. Half a flotilla of small torpedo boats flew past us. On orders from Admiral Hippen they circled around the helpless man-o'-war (which was still firing at top speed), to throw out a heavy smoke screen that soon completely enveloped the big ship. One of the light cruisers and several torpedo boats went alongside and, under the cover of the smoke screen, took the crew aboard as far as they were alive and able to walk. An explosion followed and the great cruiser leaned over on her side, dynamited by her own crew.

My most trying moment came when a signal by our flagship ordered us out for a torpedo boat attack. Grimly gritting his teeth, the commander of our boat threw the lever of the telegraph leading to the engine-room around to "Utmost power ahead." He repeated this order three times.



WEISHAUPT, as he appeared at the time about which he writes.

The little boat trembled under the tearing force of her turbines. In my thoughts I bid the rest of the world good-by. We shot past the big ships, and, throwing every precaution aside, moved straight towards the enemy.

To meet the attack, the English opened a terrific fire from their five-inch guns. Two of our boats simply somersaulted and went down head-first, having been hit by shells under the waterline on their bows.

His megaphone in one hand and gripping the rail with the other, our commander, standing near to me, yelled back: "Ready, torpedoes!"

The English fire now reached its height. We certainly did not expect to come out of this alive. The rear mast and part of the rear smokestack had been shot away. I did not notice it then. With both hands holding tight onto the banisters, I stared ahead into the uninterrupted line of frightful flashes.

"Turn," the commander yelled, "let loose torpedoes!"

Without reducing speed the boat turned on a right angle to the left. Two long and shiny torpedoes slid into the water. Another turn and we were on our way back to our cruisers. As long as I live, I shall consider it a miracle that we came back from that plunging charge.

Letting the engines slow down, the commander looked at me and grinned. Looking back at him, I understood why he grinned. We were both black as Negroes from the thick clouds of English powder-dust.

IN THE meantime our dreadnaughts, under Admiral Behnke, had arrived and under the leadership of this best-liked and most capable officer in the German Navy the battle took a decided turn in our favor, several of the British ships commencing to retreat under the united fire of our now nearly complete fleet, even though our gunners, having to aim due west into the setting sun, were under a decided handicap. H. M. S. Queen Mary was burning and soon commenced to sink. Front down, entirely ablaze, the great ship slowly disappeared into the waters, a frightful sight in the dusk that meanwhile had descended.

Our destroyers then became separated from the fleet in the oncoming night, and forced themselves in the opening of the Skager Rak, the waterway between Jutland and Norway. Subsequently we received radio orders from Admiral Scheer, the chief of our fleet, who had come to the scene when nearly all was over, to proceed home around the north end of Jutland. During our trip along the shores of the Danish Islands, early the next morning (June 1), the islands' inhabitants, who had heard the terrific roar of the battle the evening before, cheered us loudly, coming to the shore in swarms.

Reaching the port of Kiel, we had just one ton of fuel oil left and quickly replenishing our supply we continued through the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal to Wilhelmshaven. At the opening of the Jade Bay, the Wilhelmshaven port, we met the main part of the fleet and seeing the battleships in daylight for the first time could see the frightfully marred cruisers and men-o'-war. Every available tank and salvage steamer was out helping the only one that was seriously damaged, S. M. S. Seydlitz, which was near sinking. This was the veteran cruiser's third encounter. In every fight she had got the worst of it. For reasons of pride, the German Navy made supreme efforts to get the ship into a dry dock. This was finally accomplished after nearly a week, when every device known to naval engineers had been employed to keep her from sinking.

The light cruisers came in each one with a heavy load of rescued crews, among them several hundreds of British sailors who were picked up during the night after the battle. The saddest aspect of the battle was the removal of the dead and critically wounded at Wilhelmshaven Navy yards where for two days the undertakers' cars came and went in masses.

INQUIRING among the survivors about the fate of the big cruiser Luetzow, it was found that this is what had happened:

The German warships at that time carried a device known as a torpedo net for protection against torpedoes when anchored at sea. The net was of very heavy steel wire meshes and in its length covered nearly all of both of the ship's sides, being swung out at the ends of heavy iron bars operating like a horizontal pendulum. At sea the nets were rolled up and fastened with chains alongside the outer edge of the ship's deck. During the battle several shells struck and broke these chains and the net unrolled, sliding down the outside of the ship and dragging around behind where the propellers caught it, tearing most of it down and completely ensnaring themselves. This, of course, quickly stopped the great ship and the enemy, noticing her standing still, concentrated his fire upon her for nearly half an hour.

S. M. S. Derfflinger had eight British shells of the 38 centimeter type, each weighing about 800 pounds, lying in her coal tanks. Fortunately for the ship, they did not explode. This man-o'-war's own guns were all worn out. Some of the 15-centimeter guns were completely split open at the mouth, with strips rolled up on the outside. They had been firing most of the time at a speed of from twelve to sixteen shots per minute whereas the 30-centimeter guns discharged as many as seven of the 800-pound shells per minute each.

Our most distinguished wounded was Admiral Behnke, who, refusing the comparative safety of his flagship's heavy armored tower, was the only man aboard to stay in the open, giving his orders through the observation slits from the outside of the tower on the bridge. A shell fell and exploded atop of the tower, Behnke being seriously cut and bruised on his back and hip by a fragment. A hospital attendant came out and rendered first aid to the officer, who was sitting down and leaning against the tower, continuing to make his observations and giving orders. Coming into port, he was taken to the hospital ship Sierra Ventana, where for several weeks physicians were in doubt as to whether he would live.

When, several days later, Kaiser Wilhelm II came to Wilhelmshaven to thank the navy personally, his majesty gracefully called on Admiral Behnke, leaving an iron cross for him at his bed. This officer was the outstanding hero of the battle. Today he has passed into complete obscurity.

This ended the Battle of Jutland. Once more we returned to routine. Again I joined my comrades aboard S. M. S. Koenig Albert. [illegible] first job was to remove the ship's torp[illegible]ets.....

Going to College for LEARNIN'!

NO Petting, No Smoking, No Drinking, Not Much Athletics, No Automobiles. Expenses for One Year, Including Food, Rooms and Tuition—$150. Here Is the Story of Berea College, Kentucky—Something Different.

By FREDERICK H. BRENNAN
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

BEREA, Kentucky.—In "these danged mountings" that huddle like so many brown beggars trying to warm their feet under the sunshine of Kentucky's bluegrass country, a different sort of college youth has arisen. He wants book learnin'. (So many college students want anything but that.) He hasn't much money and his family cannot help. ("Dear Dad: Please mail me another check for fifty.") Maw and Pap don't believe in education, anyway. (The Governor and Mater do.) How is schooling to help raise razorback hawgs in a new-ground mountain clearing, or increase the 'baccer crop, or make more money from the patch of corn? (A college education pays, says Babson.) "Ye'd better stay t' hum, an' not be havin' no truck with books an' sich like," say Maw and Pap.

But these boys and girls of the mountains have tasted knowledge in log cabin schools. Down the muddy flinty road is another world. It beckons in newspapers that stray up the creeks and are passed around. It calls across the rail fence of the sheep lot when strangers go by. The urge to go comes strongest perhaps in winter time, when cornpone and side meat run low and Maw has reached the bottom of the 'lasses barrel. Or when Pap starts cuffing the kids around. But with or without provocation, the desire grows; part of that mysterious something which makes one generation want to improve upon the last. ("Aw, Pater, you wouldn't understand!") Life is better in the lowlands, they know, these young fearless pilgrims, and they take the trail.

To where? To Berea College, usually. It is the only school I know anything about where a boy or a girl can stay a year for $150. Very few who come to Berea have that much, but you can work your way through, here. As a matter of fact, every student must do two hours' manual labor a day in order to meet the requirements. (The school does not attract many rich men's sons.) To stay here most Berea students have to work longer than two hours a day. They come expecting that. Many boys arrive in overalls. (Oxford bags made of denim, you know.) Most of the girls arrive with a school outfit consisting of gingham dresses, cotton stockings and stout shoes. ("Mother, dear, I must have a fur coat. All the girls at school have them.") The check-in at the treasurer's office reveals pitiful secrets. Here's a lad from Horse Creek, Kentucky, come to school with $17.95. Here's a girl from Buzzard's Roost, North Carolina, with her wardrobe packed in a shoebox and $6.15 cash.

"I reckon we can work for the rest," they say. And Berea takes them in.

BEREA students matriculate, part of them at least, with as small a store of learning as of money. Some are in the first reader; some have progressed to the third year in high school; a few are ready for college. Berea has schools for them all. Affiliated with the college is a Foundation School, for beginners; an Academy, for grade and high school children; a Normal School for high school graduates who wish to teach. All entrants to any of the schools or college must be above 15 years of age. Last year there were 3000 boys and girls here. About the same number will have registered before the current school session is ended.

Both work and lessons are provided by the college. Situated about 40 miles south of Lexington, Kentucky, in the foothills of the Cumberlands, and on a 6000-acre tract, Berea College is about the whole town. With the exception of a few stores and residences, all the buildings belong to its campus. In order to give the students employment the college operates a broom factory, printing plant, weaving and basketry shop, dairy, farm, power house, bakery, hotel and several minor enterprises. The college kitchens, dormitories and other buildings are operated by student labor, under supervision. The school charges no tuition and supplies board at $2.50 a week and room at 60 cents a week. It pays the students from 12 to 16 cents an hour for their work, and as the cost of a meal is about 11 cents, a student can pay for his board with two hours' work a day.

For those too poor to pay even this low rate there are cottages where girls, chaperoned by a woman teacher, "board themselves." Their folks send weekly bundles from home; the girls cook and keep house and go to school. ("Dear Mother: The sorority has laid another assessment for maid service, so I guess I'll have to have more money.") But, whatever their financial condition, the students must work at real tasks for two hours a day, and they must keep above passing in their studies all the time. (These rules alone would almost depopulate the average university.)

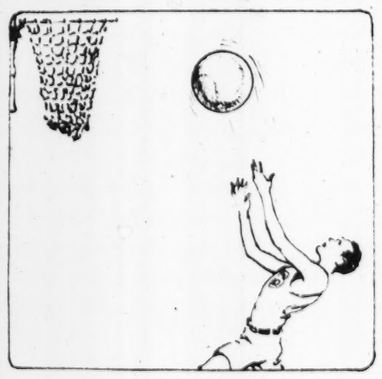
TO ONE who leaves a luxurious city home on pleasure bent (and a little studying, incidentally), Berea might seem a cheerless place. But to the youngster from Coondog Hollow, Tennessee, it must be a rare adventure. Huge spic and span brick buildings. Electric lights. Running water. Steam heat. Good food three times a day. What luxury! What excitement!

The college management protects its charges from disillusioning contrasts. Berea is a sternly guarded democracy. It is no disgrace to work your way through school here. Everybody does it. Overalls are quite as correct as sport flannels. More wear overalls than flannels here. Gingham dresses are all the rage, and it is fashionable to make your own. I haven't seen a single coonskin coat. It might be dangerous to wear one, as some far-sighted mountaineer from a neighboring peak might take a shot at the pampered undergraduate, mistaking him for a bear. A girl's fur coat would be so conspicuous as to fall into immediate disrepute.

Fraternities and sororities are not permitted. ("Dear Dad: The Betas are a bum crowd at this school. I'm pledged Phi Delta. They've got six letter men and the niftiest date list in school.") No Berea student can afford to spend money on social affairs. For the same reason the school prohibits smoking. The cost of a package of cigarettes is equal to a meal here; the students need food more than smoke. Nor are automobiles allowed. ("Dear Mother: A boy who hasn't a car is out of it at this dump.") No boys are out of it at Berea. No girls are out of it because they do not wear a sorority pin. ("Now listen, Mother. I know it costs a lot, but a girl might just as well be dead as to be nonsorority at this school.") The same reasoning applies to other apparently silly rules. For instance, gin parties are frowned on at Berea. (Any college man knows that gin is expensive.) Dates are prohibited, partly because there is no place to go and partly because the college authorities do not think that children should be allowed to wander around by twos and twos, unchaperoned. This probably is an archaic notion (we wonder what the college comics would say about it), but the idea seems to work out pretty well at Berea. The chap who is scratching to keep himself in victuals is not embittered by the sight of more fortunate fellows out spending money on the girls.

To sum up the Berea system I might say, strange as it may seem to many college students, the big idea at this school is study. Even football is subordinated. The college does not engage in games with other schools, but there are a number of intramural teams which play each other. The only intercollegiate sport is basket ball. Last season Berea had one of the crack quintets of the South and cleaned up everything in Kentucky. ("Well, Dad, I had to bet on old Mizzoo. The Kansas crowd came down with money at insulting odds, and you wouldn't have wanted me to hold back and not show my school spirit, would you? By the way, I'll need twenty-five for the St. Louis trip with the team.") There are no demands of this sort on undergraduates here, or their parents.

There are dark and gloomy tales to be picked up in "bull sessions" at Berea of what happens to breakers of regulations. Recently an Academy boy was expelled for chewing tobacco in class. The report of the affair (I did not get it at the president's office) was that the boy had bored a hole in the floor but missed a shot and stained the floor with tobacco juice. The teacher saw the tell-tale marks and kept watch. After holding his chew for 20 minutes (you cannot swallow Kentucky twist tobacco and live) the poor lad's spirit was broken. He confessed, was reported to the dean and left on the afternoon bus.

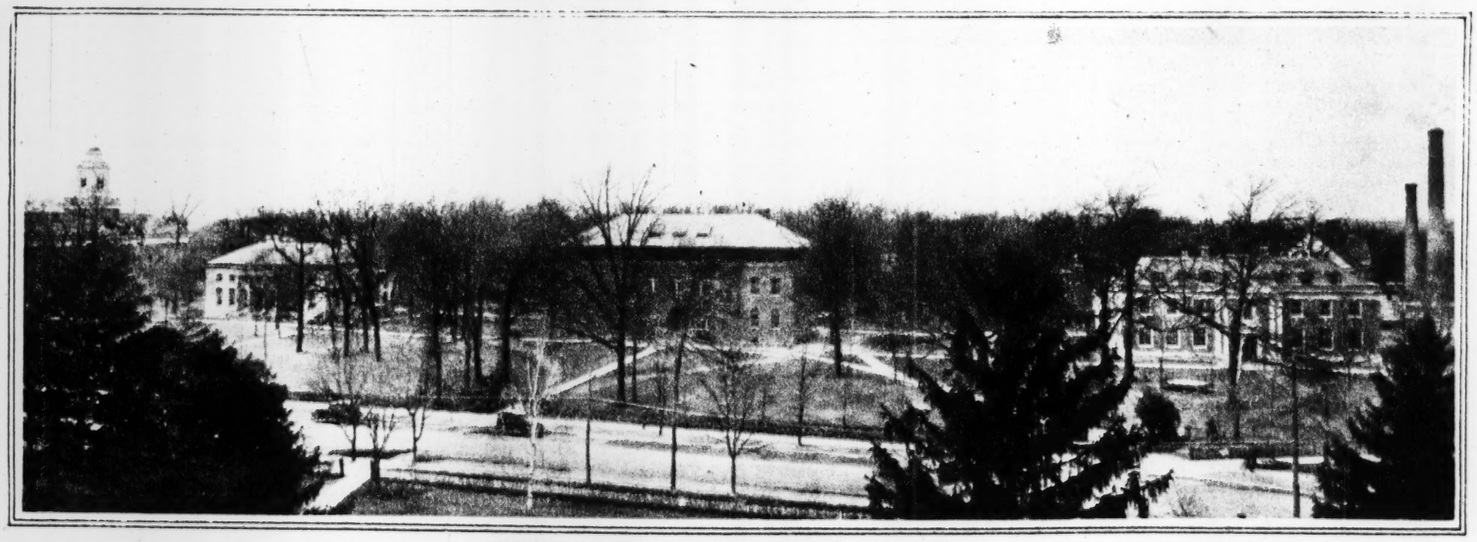


Some time back a college sophomore broke out and went absolutely on the loose. He consorted with a town boy who had a package of Camels imported from Richmond, Kentucky, 14 miles away. The town boy kept on insisting, "Have just one more," and the poor weak dupe kept puffing away. After five cigarettes he managed to flee from the rendezvous, still steady on his feet. But he made the mistake of rushing right into class without taking a chaser of listerine. The dean asked him why he was late, sniffed, and halitosis did the rest.

These are just college stories, of course, and go to make up the atmosphere of what I discovered to be jolly old Berea. For Berea is a happy place. It has its traditions, its old brick and ivy-covered buildings, its absent-minded professors, and its youth. When I arrived on the campus students were sauntering to and from classes, bareheaded in winter, according to the latest collegiate mode, and a very restful scene it was. ("Now, Mother, don't be an old fogy. Lipsticks are all right, and I most certainly will not wear that petticoat you sent me.") It was quite a treat to see fresh-faced coeds with enough on to keep them warm. A man uses his eyes too much on the average college campus. And it was such a relief not to see canes, or cigarette holders, or pearl-gray, double-breasted vests, and not to hear: "Haw. What I mean, smooth. Yes, I guess we're not the berries. They sent the house mother to a seminar or something and we all pariored in. Did we? Oh, naughty, naughty!" No one talked like that at Berea while I was there. The coeds at Berea have two social evenings a week, which means that with several women teachers present they greet young men in the parlors of the women's dormitories. Everybody in school except the seniors must be off the streets by 7:30 o'clock in the evening and in bed by 10:30 p. m. Seniors are allowed to go to bed when they please.

COLLEGIATE? No, these youngsters didn't seem to have the time for it. I visited the various college workshops with C. Byrd West, the alumni secretary. In the kitchens some jolly college boys were peeling potatoes. In the bakery another gang of wild American youths were stuffing cookies into big ovens. In the print shop others who are the despair of the older generation were solemnly setting type on linotype machines for The Pinnacle, the college paper. We looked in at the cow barn, where college seniors were milking (there is something sublime in watching a college senior milk a cow) and we visited the "log cabin," where girls are taught handicrafts. There I was shown a marvelous assortment of hooked rugs, counterpanes, luncheon sets, etc. In a corner a very pretty co-ed was running a small hand-

WILLIAM JAMES HUTCHINS, President of Berea College.



PARTIAL VIEW OF BEREA COLLEGE GROUNDS.

I talked with a youngster who was dusting the lobby that evening—to make up his daily two hours, no doubt.

"I'm in the Academy," he said. "I've been heah at school for two yeahs. I'm a-goin' back home in the mountings to teach next yeah to make enough money to come back heah. I reckon on keepin' up thataway till I get through college."

Clump-squeak-clump the parade passes on old and heavy shoes. Colors for the most part are drab; faded denim, worn sweaters, sleeves too short or too long, hair unkempt—but stout backs and hopeful faces. ("Berea College? Never heard of it. Must be some hick dump in the backwoods. How's their horseshoe team getting on? Have a good season?") So there are two ways of looking at that parade. The marchers do not seem to care very much about any visitor's opinion. They are too busy for posing. You can take your choice.

I ATTENDED chapel in the quaint old meeting house on the campus. It is a brick building with a white belfry and, inside, has lofts above the main floor. The religion that is taught Berea students there might be called odd, too, if one knows theological Kentucky. Berea is a nonsectarian school and one of its patrons is the Union Church of the town, which has no denominational ritual. Berea teaches evolution in science courses and permits visiting ministers to make such startling statements. Dr. William James Hutchins, D. D., is president. He is a Yale man and formerly was professor of homiletics in the Graduate Theological School of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Nobody, apparently, cut chapel that morning. Dr. Hutchins talked to the students on "the education that saves and the salvation that educates." ("Dear Dad: Well, I'll toddle to the chapel, if you insist, but nobody does it here.") It was a very liberal talk, and had to do with smart alecs who become so educated they no longer believe in God; and with religious men who become so religious they no longer believe in science. I was so busy watching the students that I missed the moral of the talk, but a co-ed on the steps outside afterwards explained it quite perfectly.

"The president meant, I think," she said, "that neither extreme is desirable, but that a rational mixture of science and religion is the best compromise."

I gasped. I had at last found a co-ed who remembered what had been said in chapel. Hurrying back inside I made my way to the platform and was introduced to President Hutchins, who is a very forceful, very pleasant and very busy gentleman. He had a cabinet meeting on, he explained, which would hold him most of the day, but he inquired as to my sources of information, obtained a hasty glimpse of what facts I had gathered about Berea, acclaimed them as accurate, and said he would see me later.

MEANWHILE, John F. Smith, professor of rural social science, informed the visitor that Berea was founded in 1855 by free-will offerings, has been endowed with several millions by free-will offerings and is supported by free-will offerings. He wanted me to be very sure to mention this, so that any rich men who read the story may see that Berea is a good and worthy place to support.

As I prepared to leave, Professor Smith asked: "Are you sure you understand the importance of our work here?"

Remembering that parade of shabby earnest students across the campus, I told him that I did.

Once More: "TREASURE!"

But This Time It Is to Be Done SCIENTIFICALLY

Here Is a Man Who Has Calmly Calculated the Possibilities of a Rich Find on Famed Cocos Island in the South Pacific. Lieutenant F. W. Kealey Has Set Sail From England With All the Paraphernalia Valuable to a Scientific Expedition. He Swears He Is Coming Back With GOLD!

FALMOUTH, England. — "Treasure hunting, in these days, can be and should be a scientific, cautiously planned, business enterprise."

I listened respectfully to this brisk remark and carefully wrote it down. I was seated in the skipper's cabin of the steam yacht St. George, then moored to the Old Town Quay in sleepy Falmouth but now, as these words are read, ploughing the oceans toward Cocos Island, a tiny mountain top thrust up in the Pacific Ocean about 600 miles west of Panama. Across from me, seated on the bunk underneath the "tell-tale" compass fastened in the ceiling, was the author of this very modern remark on "efficiency" in treasure-hunting.

He was a tall, broad-shouldered chap, with an odd mixture of what in England is called the "naval manner" and the grim, far-sighted determination of the man of business. There was nothing of the dreamer about him, and yet here he was, starting off on a most fantastic enterprise, that of stripping Cocos Island, in the Pacific, of pirate hoards estimated at from $50,000,000 to $70,000,000!

Gold, mind you! All the old stuff. Gold bars in kegs and iron-bound boxes. Spanish doubloons; caskets containing jewels from Peruvian monasteries. "• • • a scientific, • • • business enterprise!"

"Is he a plain nut?" I asked myself. And I was forced to add: "If so, he is a nut with a passion for detail."

FOR the striking thing about Lieutenant F. W. Kealey's much-discussed expedition to Cocos Island after "buried treasure" is the amount of careful planning and scientific forethought which seems to have gone into it. Even the skipper's cabin illustrated it. At the foot of the bunk was a great brown paper parcel. "About a thousand yards of the finest mosquito netting," he explained, noting my curious glance. On the other side of him the pillow swarmed with rolls of blue-prints. Books littered the floor; one bulky tome was in German: "Studien aus der Sudsee," by Joachim Graf Pfeil. A medicine chest stuck out from beneath the bunk.

"I suppose there have been twenty expeditions after that treasure on Cocos Island," said the Lieutenant calmly, "and they have all failed. One expedition is said to have found a hoard but lost it again! The trouble with all these expeditions is that they went out poorly equipped; they dug their spades in at random and when their supplies ran out, they had to quit.

"Our party will consist of eight picked men. One of them is a botanist from the Kew Botanical Gardens, an expert in tropical botany, and under his guidance we shall make a topographical and botanical survey of the island—which is about 14 miles in circumference—and determine as accurately as possible what the island was like when it began to be used in 1818 by those enterprising pirates who, finding the Atlantic Ocean too hot for them, transferred their activities to the Pacific.

"Having stripped the island, metaphorically speaking, of its vegetation and determined, as closely as we can, what the soil erosion has been, whether the ocean has torn away any of the island—perhaps a grotto or two!—we shall be able to answer, one way or the other, the old theory that possibly the enormous treasure-hoards there have already disappeared beneath the sea.

"I don't claim that these questions will be easy to answer. Quite the contrary. But approximate answers will be very helpful. Instead of trying to blow the top off the island, like Admiral Palliser, or wandering around haphazardly with pick and shovel, like most of the expeditions, we'll be able to indicate, say, three sites in the order of their probability—the most likely site, the next most likely site, and so on.

"Personally, I shan't worry if we don't unpack a single pickax for three or four months! But at the end of that period we'll have a pretty fair reproduction of the island as it stood a hundred years ago, we'll know the most probable landing-places, the most likely paths and—" here he broke off abruptly.

"WELL, if you don't mind, I won't mention the additional piece of data which will be in our possession then," he continued. "We have been able to get a good deal of sound scientific advice on the problems confronting us but in justice to those who have invested money in our enterprise, I can't make public all the data in our possession. It wouldn't be fair."

He took me around the steam yacht and showed me some of the equipment—boxes of explosives carefully packed with dunnage beneath to keep them dry and timbers to keep them away from the sweating sides of the yacht. Crates of shovels, of ten-foot saws, of pickaxes, three immense coils of rope, two grindstones, six huge post-hole diggers. Above on the deck was a vast litter of boxes which had not yet been stowed, while on the Old Town Quay a creaking crane picked up one huge box after another and swung it over the forward hatch of the yacht and lowered it into the hold.

As we made our way back toward the skipper's cabin, Lieutenant Kealey tapped a locked door.

"This is our dark-room," he said. "We are taking along a cinematographer and will have a record of every stage of our treasure-hunt.

"After that," he added with a laugh, "it will be easy for anybody to go and do likewise!"

Seated once more in the cabin, out of the way of the din of loading, the leader of the expedition crossed his legs and dropped into the historical vein.

"Spanish records certainly justify all the trouble that has been taken to find pirate treasure on Cocos Island," he said.

"One of the newspapers says that the treasure is estimated at £14,000,000, but that is a guess and I don't know where they got it. Not from us. The authorities of Costa Rica have a remarkably detailed history of the island and their estimate is around £10,000,000.

"It has been a most unholy spot for more than a hundred years; people along the Western coast of Central and South America have suffered under the depredations of the robber outfits that made Cocos Island their rendezvous.

"IN 1818 a notorious cut-throat named Benito, who had plundered the churches of Peru of all their gold and silver plate, founded the first hoard on Cocos Island. He was a most methodical scoundrel and two years later he deposited another huge amount of booty from the mainland; this time in gold bars, in gold and silver coins and such ecclesiastical loot as he had missed on his first raid.

"Then in 1828, when Chile and Peru were locked in a death struggle, the Government of Peru placed the contents of its exchequer aboard a vessel for safe-keeping. Unfortunately the captain of the vessel was William Thompson, who had been mate under Benito. Naturally, Thompson made short work of the Peruvian supercargoes who had been placed aboard the vessel in official charge of the treasure; they 'walked the plank' and Thompson sailed to Cocos Island and hid the treasure where nobody, from that day to this, has been able to find it. In the meantime the Peruvian navy, getting wind of the enterprise, pursued him and nearly caught him, but he escaped to Jamaica where, at his death, he is supposed to have confided to a man named Keating the exact locality of the treasure.

"Keating chartered a vessel, the Edgecomb, and went to Cocos Island. One version says that he found part of the treasure but that his party quarreled, he was killed and when the survivors returned with fresh supplies, they were foiled by the jungle which had obliterated every last trace of the hoard.

"PERSONALLY, from what I know of the Pacific Islands—and I have only just come back from a scientific expedition out there, as you know—I doubt whether Keating found the hoards. I doubt if he had either the knowledge or the physical equipment to attack the jungle, you might say, on its weakest side. If he started in slap-dash hacking his way to some imaginary point, he might be hacking yet. The jungle does not yield its secret easily."

By this time the little cabin was blue with smoke and the errant-adventurer stepped to the wall and unscrewed a port. He did it carefully, thoughtfully running his finger around the rubber fittings.

"Do you know what I am going to do when I get a million pounds or so out of this affair?" he said suddenly, with a whimsical smile. "I am going to offer half of it to any marine engineer who can design a porthole that won't leak. I detest a leaky porthole, which means that I detest all portholes, for without exception they all leak. I bar none; I bar absolutely none. They all leak. You know what Kipling says about a ship, how it shakes down and becomes a unit, becomes a person, finds itself? It's all very pretty and it's all very true, but the thing that naval architects don't realize is that it is the porthole that does the adjusting, that gives a little here and a little there and enables the shell of the ship to become a person! Well, a little here and a little there means a hell of a leak!"

He sighed and returned to the subject.

"English people think you are half-cracked if you go off on a treasure hunt," he resumed. "It didn't use to be that way, but that's the way it is today. Funny, too. I have friends who think nothing of investing several hundred pounds in an alleged gold mine, in the pursuit of mere gold-bearing ore, but they would be horrified at the idea of investing so much as £10 in the pursuit of solid gold—mind you, SOLID GOLD!"

He laughed and slapped a hefty knee.

"THAT'S where the Latins have been smarter than we," he said. "Years ago a man who knew Spain inside out said to me that of the dozen directors of one of the big Madrid banks—all of them rich men—at least three or four or five, I forget how many, had laid the foundations of their fortunes by going out to some lonely island in the Atlantic and digging up pirate treasure! They knew, from reading their own history, that in the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, a lonely island in the sea was the only bank that a poor, hardworking pirate had!

"Well, pirates die not only without benefit of clergy but usually without leaving heirs. And there's their treasure, left behind, unclaimed, unknown, the earth's good gold going back into the earth. It would be silly, not to have a shot at it."

In a vague embarrassment he rolled up the blue-prints on the pillow, pawed around for a rubber band, found two, studied them intently, put one in his pocket and the other around the roll of blue-prints, studied the roll of blue-prints absently, fished out the second rubber-band, cracked it around the roll and, with an inexplicable sigh, tossed the accursed thing away.

"We may come back feeling awfully foolish," he said, "but I don't really think so. It's been done before, you know, it's been done before. That's what I say to myself over and over again, it has been done before. It is true that at least 20 expeditions have failed on Cocos Island; I don't deny it. On the contrary, that is the first thing I mention to the people I've asked to back us on this gamble. 'Mind you,' I've said, 'this nut is a hard one to crack; at least 20 expeditions have tried and failed.' And then I go on to point out that the adventurous Northern treasure-hunters have never been distinguished for scientific research. They have attacked Cocos Island with their hearts, not their heads. A jungle is no joke! It presents a lot of problems. What we say is, let's solve in advance all that can be solved in advance and when we begin the search, let's be ready to search!"

WE WENT out on deck; the crane was still protesting, still swinging, still lowering shrieking its burdens into the hold. Lieutenant Kealey, with the ex-naval officer's sense of the amount of grease that a crane or derrick ought to have, frowned and addressed to the world in general a free flow of cuss-words that have practically nothing to do with the plot of the story. "Next to portholes," he said, with vague animosity in his eye, "next to portholes, Gawd almighty—"

I hastily shook him by the hand. The interview was certainly over. Why stay, I said to myself, why stay and watch a strong man wrestling with the antique crane of Old Town Quay? I have 10 minutes in which to catch the train to London.

A tremendous liner, the personification of success at sea, carries to America these few descriptive lines; but not before I am able to copy triumphantly from the Times this brief notice from "Lloyd's":

Falmouth, Jan. 10.—Steam Yacht St. George, Lt. F. W. Kealey, commanding. For Panama Canal. Cargo: none. Object: scientific research.

Well, well, I say to myself, with just time enough to catch the boat train, there are fools who are fools and there are fools who are not; three cheers, I say, and the best of luck to Kealey.

It will be six months before we know the answer, but that man may do wonders for leaky portholes yet!

MRS. Cromwell—Secretary of State

"Whatever I've Made of Myself I've Done by Hard Work," Says Mrs. Emma Guy Cromwell. She Is the First Woman in Kentucky to Hold the Office of Secretary of State. Here Is the Interesting Story of Her Career.

By a Post-Dispatch Staff Correspondent.

FRANKFORT, Kentucky.—The Secretary of State for Kentucky gave quite a girlish laugh as she greeted her visitor in the Capital Hotel lobby, which was utterly cluttered up with legislators. "So you want an interview?" she remarked. "Well, there really isn't anything to tell. I'm just a hard-working little body."

She proved this statement immediately by shaking hands with three Senators, five Representatives, two club women, six lobbyists and fourteen wives of prominent Kentuckians. When the swirl of humanity had swept on to other islands on main floor and mezzanine, the Secretary of State found time to say: "Come with me."

And she was off, with a bow here and a bow there and a "How do you do, Senator," in between. Bobbing like a trim little ship across the white-tile ocean of floor, she led the way to a somewhat secluded place in a corner of the mezzanine. Almost at our elbows a bridge game was in progress, and though the players were high in Kentucky's political life I will spare their constituents the shock of their names.

"I never play cards myself," the Secretary of State assured me, a bit nervously. "I don't know a jack from a king." I smoothed over the situation by saying that many women who do play cards play as if they did not know a jack from a king. So I laughed and so did she, a bit uncertainly, and my chance had come to study Mrs. Emma Guy Cromwell, first woman Secretary of State in Kentucky.

"Whatever I've made of myself I've done by hard work," she began.

She isn't the woman politician type, as the public conceives the type to be. She is one of those very sweet little ladies most associated with church work. The sort that stands in the back of the church and helps the minister greet new members. The sort that organizes suppers and bazars, contributes largely and does most of the work; the sort that stays behind to help with the dishes while other ladies are crowing over the receipts and congratulating each other upon the success of the affair. A woman no longer young, but yet not old—just old enough not to be flirtatious with men and thus arouse other women's antagonism. Petite, gentle, once beautiful and still handsome—and with a mind of her own. Yet, this strength of opinion is not obtrusive or obnoxious; you suspect that Mrs. Cromwell much prefers to catch her flies with honey. S* has, you suspect, the all-important ability to work with women without arousing their jealousy, envy or malice; and to be properly deferential to men.

But a very definite mind of her own—oh, yes. I began firing at her a number of leading questions and she promptly balked.

"Oh, I haven't time this evening. How long are you going to be here? Well, you just write out the questions you want me to answer and come to the Capitol tomorrow morning at eight o'clock. I always reach my office at eight o'clock. I'll answer your questions then."

With a smile and bow she was off again, escorting me to the lobby. We paused now and then while she said:

"Oh, I do want you to meet Senator So-and-So. Senator, I told him he mustn't leave Kaintucky without meeting you. The Senator, young man, is one of our leaders of whom we are most proud."

Or else:

"I do so want you to meet Representative So-and-So. He's such a splendid man—" this spoken audibly in the Representative's near presence—"here, young man, are our three very finest men in the House."

At which the guardians of the Commonwealth of Kentucky were quite tickled and everybody felt very noble, and grand, and graceful, as we bowed to each other in that old Kentucky fashion.

Honey? Clever, clever Mrs. Cromwell!

When I left her that evening she was still shaking hands, and her lovely Southern voice was saying gallant things to the flower and chivalry of the South.

THINKING her mention of an eight o'clock starting hour for a state office was just a little bluff, I made it my business to be at the Capitol next morning a bit before eight. But, promptly at eight, she came sailing down the corridor toward the spacious, dignified suite of offices she occupies. Nobody else was there but a Negro porter. Her office force did not start work until eight-thirty.

"How do you like my porter's white coat?" she asked, after the usual felicitations had passed. "That's my doing. As soon as I was elected I made him put on a white coat. It looks so much better, don't you think? And here's another thing—my two men assistants had been in the habit of working without their coats. I suggested that it would be more dignified if they wore their coats and they were nice enough to do it for me. You know, mine is a very dignified office, next to the Governor's—" she looked around proudly at the tall, leather-backed chair, the huge desk, the mahogany wainscoted walls, the heavy plush carpet of her private office. Then she led her visitor into the outer offices where her clerical force of six girls are employed.

"See my filing system? Isn't it fine? You know, when I came here the records were filed in an antiquated system." Pulling out some drawers she showed me an intricate arrangement of reference cards. "You see, there are different colors. Don't they look nice? Under our system we can find things in half the time. And—oh, I want to tell you about some other work we're doing. I'm having a catalog made of all the state papers as far back as our first Governor. When I was elected and came here to the Capitol I found that the state papers had all been tossed into boxes in the basement. I'm sorting them out and our catalog is almost ready. Kentucky will be the only state besides Wisconsin to have such a catalog."

MRS. CROMWELL at her desk in the State House, Frankfort, Kentucky.

THE FIRST WOMAN SECRETARY OF STATE in Kentucky. A portrait of Mrs. Emma Guy Cromwell.

We moved into a storeroom which she explained was used for conferences as well as for a place to keep supplies for her office.

"You know," she said, "nothing in my office is wasted. I require my helpers to account for every sheet of paper. Men wouldn't bother to do that, would they? But we women watch the 'littles.' Last year my office made $85,000 above expenses. I'm rather proud of that. You see, my economizing did mount up. I run my office just like a clock. We work from 8:30 until 4:30 and during that time we clean up our desks. Every desk must be clear every day. All letters and telegrams which come in must be answered before we go home. If it is too much of a rush, then I come back here in the evening with my own private stenographer and finish.

"In my work I have to sign nearly every document the Governor signs. Death warrants—I've signed five of them—commissions, pardons, corporation franchise permits, receipts for bonds and other state papers. The office used to have a rubber stamp with the signature of the Secretary of State on it that was used in signing most of the papers. But I did away with that at once. I sign every paper in my own hand. The way I work it—I sign a lot of blank warrants and so forth which are kept under lock and key. In that way I always have enough signatures ahead so as not to be worked to death on rush days.

"NOW mark this. I pray over my work. I pray to be able to carry it on in just the very best manner. I try to be as good a Christian as I know how. But I don't allow religion or politics to influence me in dealing with my employes. I try to treat them as a Christian would. In many state offices if an employe is sick very long his name is taken off the payroll. I would not do that. One of my employes was sick more than four months and the salary went on just the same. I prorated the absent one's work among us; we all worked a bit harder and it didn't cost the state anything extra."

She took the list of questions I had prepared, adjusted her glasses and began a systematic series of answers.

"I was born in Franklin, Simpson County, Kentucky. My father was Ashley Guy and my mother was Alice Milliken Queensberry. We trace back to the Duncans of Scotland and the Guys of England. Very good family. But my father died when I was a little girl and the war had ruined the family fortunes. My mother put me in a Masonic home at Scottsville, Kentucky, where I stayed three years. I went to the public schools in Scottsville and then to Howard College at Gallatin, Tennessee. Later, I attended the Western Normal College at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and I have studied, also, at the University of Michigan. Then I taught in the rural schools of my home county, also at Western Normal and at the Scottsville Seminary. Then, I decided to make the race for State Librarian, who is elected by the Legislature. I was given the place after 28 days of balloting and came here to Frankfort to live.

"WHILE I was here I met my future husband, William Cromwell, an attorney of Frankfort. We were married in 1896 and I gave up my position. We had one son, William. I did not work again until after my husband's death in 1912. At this time I had about $2,000. So I decided to build an apartment house. Now, young man, that may have sounded like a funny idea—to start work on an apartment house with $2,000—but the Lord was with me. I went right ahead, borrowed the rest of the money and built the Cromwell Apartments. The building still stands in good order and full of tenants in Frankfort right now.

"I was asked to take the position of enrolling clerk in the state House of Representatives, and I accepted. I made a study of parliamentary law and wrote a book on the subject. My book is used as an authority by the Kentucky Legislature today.

"I see you ask why I went into politics and if woman's best place isn't the home. But I didn't have a home. My son was killed in an accident after fighting through that terrible war in France, my husband was gone—what was there for me? I plunged into politics to keep from giving up. I had to have an interest in life.

"If circumstances had been otherwise, I wouldn't be holding a political office. I'd be in my home. So you can't apply hard and fast doctrines to what a woman should do or what she shouldn't do.

"You want to know about my first political race. Well, in 1923 my friends in the southern part of the state wanted me to run for Secretary of State. They'd write in and come to see me and I just couldn't tell them no. So I declared on the Democratic ticket and started after the nomination.

"I'm not much of a talker. I just like to get around among folks and organize. So that's what I did in this campaign. I visited 80 counties during the campaign in 1923. I'd take my old black mammy for a chaperon and my car and chauffeur and we'd start out. I had friends everywhere, it seemed, and it didn't cost me much for hotel bills. In politics, organization counts more than anything else. So I devoted my time largely to that, though I made more speeches for the ticket than any man in the state.

"I ORGANIZED the women. I built up my machine in 35 counties. Was it wrong to have a machine? Bosh. You have to organize. I think I was very good at it, too. You see, I'd get pretty girls to work at the polls for me. A pretty girl near a polling place has a lot of influence, let me tell you. Especially among the men. Did the women support me? Of course. Now—let's see—you ask here whether the women political leaders weren't jealous of me and whether I got most of my support from the men. No, the women leaders were very loyal. Of course, you know how women are. Sometimes you'll find a woman who is just the leetlest bit catty. But the majority of the women supported me as a woman and I won the nomination by 5,000 majority and ran next to the Governor, himself, in the final election.

"And oh, the stories I could tell about politics in this state! But I won't. You shan't pry them from me.

"I notice that you want me to declare myself on a lot of public questions. Well—here goes. I'm for good roads and good schools, of course. Now, evolution—let me see. Why, I don't know anything about it. Not a thing. I believe the Bible from 'kiver to kiver,' I'm a Methodist. I get enough from my religion to comfort and sustain me. Why should I poke about and find things to quibble at? That answers that question. Do I believe women equal to men, and that women can hold any office men can? I certainly do. That is, not all women can manage office, nor can all men. What I mean is, that if the same selective system were applied to given bodies of men and women you'd find just as many capable women among them as men.

"Women on juries? Why not? Oh, come now, you don't really believe that women are emotionally incapable of rendering justice? Why, I've seen men juries moved to tears by the veriest rot and piffle. Men juries have been swayed emotionally by arguments which any woman would smile at. Women are no softer hearted than men. Would I vote for a death sentence? Of course I would if I thought the crime merited it. How do I stand on lynching? Well—er—it's this way:

"Lynching is a terrible thing in theory and practice. But there are times when I can imagine people feel a culprit cannot be punished too severely. So many times the culprits—Negroes, mostly, who attack white girls—get off too easily in court. I guess I'd better not be too dogmatic about lynching. Prohibition? Well, I'm dogmatic about that all right. I believe in prohibition, absolutely, and I spend a lot of time talking on law enforcement in this state. Women everywhere should fight hard for that law. They have suffered most from liquor. I'm ashamed of any woman who, because she is financially interested in breweries or thinks it is politically expedient for her to declare against prohibition, sides with the liquor interests.

"The situation in Kentucky is particularly trying because so many of our best families have money tied up in bonded warehouses. Naturally, they're against prohibition. You know I believe the saying: 'It is necessary to live as one thinks, but one generally ends by thinking as one has lived.' So many editors who attack prohibition write as they drink. Is that enough on prohibition?

"THIS next question isn't exactly fair. You ask whether women are ever loyal to each other and whether my women friends wouldn't stab me in the back if they saw a chance, and whether women instead of making politics cleaner have added a sinister subtlety past the understanding of man. I think that a woman can be as clean in politics as in her home or office. While it is true that women will not lie for each other as men do, and are not as loyal to each other in times of stress as men are, they are learning. You must give us more time. We haven't been out in the world long enough and we haven't learned that we have a new power which makes our old deceitful, adroit wiles unnecessary. I do want to insist on this. The women of Kentucky have been very loyal to me, and I am grateful."

The interviewer asked as to her plans for future political conquests, mentioning that in Frankfort rumor has it she will run for Lieutenant-Governor next time, or maybe Governor. This caused her to blush.

"Questioned on this point," she said, "the Secretary of State was enigmatic." So I put down after that question—enigmatic.

It was the last question, because a delegation from the Federated Women's Clubs of Kentucky or some such body was waiting without. So she excused herself, gracefully, in the manner of a busy hostess, but paused to add one more thing.

"Oh yes—I almost forgot. Charwomen used to take care of the cleaning in the Capitol. But I had their names changed to matrons and raised their pay. Matron is a much more dignified title than charwoman, don't you think?"

We parted in complete accord.

St. Valentine's Day

By Harry R. Burke

JUST why the good St. Valentine should be patron of lovers a search among the lives of the Saints will scarcely reveal. Valentine was a Roman, a priest in the time of Emperor Claudius II. He was a powerful preacher. It is recorded that he worked at least one miracle. But that miracle had nothing to do with love.

The old story recalls that Valentine, famous through Rome for his preaching, was summoned before Claudius. He appeared, humble enough, before the pompous court. Claudius himself, if the written tradition is to be believed, sought to question the man and learn the secret of his faith and of his power.

"Why not worship the gods?" the Emperor asked.

"Because they are but men, and full of filthiness," the saint replied. Then was the fate of Valentine sealed. After the mockery of a trial he was sentenced, beaten and beheaded.

But neither the headsman's task nor the court's was the task of Claudius. He turned Valentine over to a Judge—Asterius. And Asterius made the mistake—in the Roman view—of taking his prisoner home with him. Whereupon Valentine healed the youngest daughter of the Judge—a mere baby—of her blindness and the family of Asterius all became Christians.

After that Claudius got another Judge and Valentine won the crown of martyrdom on February 14, 270 A. D.

NOR does ancient art indicate that the good patron of lovers—who was himself a celibate—had any special interest in the particular happiness of man and maid. He is shown often enough with a sword—a symbol of his brave defiance of the Emperor or of his fate at the hands of the executioner, as you will. Also, he is shown holding in his hands the sun—as it were a symbol of the light he brought into the eyes of the Judge's two-year-old daughter, or of the spiritual light he brought into the Judge's home. That is all. One must look deeper to find the reason St. Valentine's Day was set apart for lovers.

There is an old tradition persisting through English folklore that on that day the birds choose their mates.

"Last Valentine Day when birds of kind Their paramours with mutual chirpings find"— wrote the poet Gay in a verse which suggests also the old English belief that the person first spied upon that day shall be one's own true love, for the closing lines are:

"Thee first I spied—and the first swain we see
In spite of Fortune shall our true love be."

That belief continued down to within the last 200 years, for in The Connoisseur, of 1754, a young lady wrote:

"Last Friday was St. Valentine's Day, and the night before I got five bay leaves and pinned four to the corners of my pillow and the fifth to the middle; and then if I dreamt of my sweetheart, Betty said, we should be married before the year was out. But to make it more sure I boiled an egg hard and took out the yolk and filled it with salt; and when I went to bed ate it shell and all, without speaking or drinking after it. We also wrote our lovers' names on bits of paper and rolled them up in clay and put them into water; and the first that rose up was to be our valentine. Would you think it? Mr. Blossom was my man. I lay abed and shut my eyes all the morning until he came to our house, for I would not have seen another man before him for all the world."

Heroic were the measures taken by the flapper of 200 years ago!

CERTAINLY she was not the first to write lovers' names on bits of paper that her valentine might be discovered. Samuel Pepys in his diary mentions the custom, and it had been known certainly in England from the time of Chaucer. Says Pepys, writing on St. Valentine's Day, 1667:

"This morning came up to my wife's bedside little Will Mercer to be her valentine and brought her her name written upon blue paper in gold letters, done by himself, all very pretty; and we were both pleased with it. But I am also this year my wife's valentine; and it will cost me five pounds; but that I must have laid out if we had not been valentines."

FAMED HUMORIST HAS ONE WORD FOR SOUTHERN TRAINS: "SLOW!"

Lardner Describes Snail-Like Trip To Florida

"YES, WE GOT THERE BUT THAT'S ALL"

By RING LARDNER

NO DOUBT my little radio audience would like to hear a few incidence in regards to my little trip from Jacksonville to Belleair down in Florida. It is about time people was hearing about Florida which has been kept a kind of a secret in the newspapers for some reason another. Personly nobody has approached me in the matter and I am at liberty to disgust the subject without fears and favors, so will start out with a brief description of the little trip referred to above.

WIDDOUT DOT DOPE!

Now a good many folks in making this trip take a shot of morphine before climbing into their berth and thereby miss a good many incidence of the trip. I went to bed, as they laughingly call it, with a clear mind and well able to appreciate all that went on.

START IS PERFECT.

Well, the time table says we was to pull out of Jacksonville at 10 p. m. so along about midnight the engineer showed up at the information desk at the union station and inquired as to the probable whereabouts of his mount. Nobody seemed to know till finely a little colored boy (they called them pickaninnies down there) happened to make the remark that he had seen a train on track 7 that looked kind of lonesome and sure enough it turned out to be the one sought. The fireman had also found it some way and was chuckling to himself over a copy of "Wit of the World" when the engineer appeared.

ALL SET.

"Well, Bill," said the fireman, "what's the good word?"

"Never better," was the reply. "The week's record is 8 hours late and it's raining so it looks like we ought to beat it without no difficulty. But the Pullman conductor told me they was a few of the passengers asleep and that will half to be rectified before we get going."

A JOKE.

"All right, but wait till I read you this one. 'Johnny,' said the teacher, 'how do you spell frog?' 'F-r-o-g,' said Johnny. 'Good!' said the teacher. 'Good?' said Johnny. 'Why, it's perfect!' "

"I got a boy like that," said the engineer when the laughter had died away. "Well, lets go!"

READY, YALE?

Zam! But when Referee Crowell untangled the mass it was found that the boys had been throwed for a yard loss. A trick play failed and a plunge through the weak side resulted in another loss.

"Better punt, Bill," said the fireman.

SCORE: 0—0.

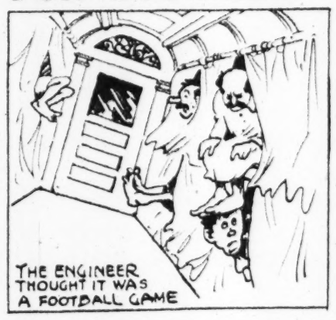
"I was just kidding," replied the engineer and on the fourth attempt made a first down on a split rails play.

The half ended an hour later with the train in the engineer's possession a mile outside the yards.

THIS HAS GOT TO STOP.

During the intermission the train conductor come forward and give the boys a terrible bawling out.

"What do you think this is, the Century?" he said. "You've been going too fast and half the passengers is still asleep. Jerk 'em out of their berths and make some noise! Use your whistle and make them steam pipes pound! Back up a couple of times! If I didn't have a date in St. Petersburg next Thursday I'd make you back way to the station and start out again right!"



STOPS TWICE AT DOUBLE HOUSES.

In another two hours the train had left Jacksonville a good 10 miles behind and was racing on like a pushcart with a stop every few hundred yards to give Bill a chance to catch up with his correspondence or Jesse, the fireman, an opportunity to study some queerly shaped tree. Jesse was fascinated by queerly shaped trees. It was part of his charm. But he kept his mind sufficiently on the business at hand to see that Bill did not weaken. For example a stop was made alongside of some 2 room, 5 family homes, one of them embellished by a 2-dog garage.

WE ALL MAKE MISTAKES.

"What are you stopping here for?" demanded Jesse.

"Why not?" said the engineer.

"It's a town!" said Jesse.

"My mistake!" said Bill and jerked the throttle open with the brakes all set.

THE PULLMAN CADDY.

At intervals of 15 minutes other stops was made and a boy with a lantern walked out behind the train to see if any foursomes wanted to go through. This practice also gives the engineer an excuse to blow his whistle four or five times to recall the boy, and the man that invented it is said to of been presented with a new set of gold-plated eardrums by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

TAKES NO CHANCES.

"Bill," said Jesse along about five, "if we ain't careful we'll be within a day of on time. Why don't you pull up on the next siding? They might be something wants to pass us."

"I will," said Bill, "but I don't like these long waits on sidings. It makes the passengers soft."

DON'T BELIEVE IN SIGNS.

"I heard a terrible rumor today," said Jesse, "I heard the road was going to install telegraph lines so as we will always be informed where other trains is at."

"The day they do that, I quit the business," said Bill. "I went into this pour le sport and that would spoil it."

"Not necessarily," replied Jesse. "You could always pretend you couldn't read and go on like we always been going."

A WHISTLING FOOL.

The engineer now began to amuse himself by blowing a long series of crossing whistles. They wasn't no crossings and nobody to cross them if they had of been, and not only that but suppose they was a crossing and somebody crossing it and we hit them, why the way we was going all it would of done was just stop us another time or at worst set us back a couple of yards.

A CRANK, EVIDENTLY.

"Passengers ain't what they use to be," said Bill reminiscently. "Before you come with me, one time they was a fella on the train and I was going along whistling like this and he jumped off the Pullman and run up here and jumped in and handed me one of these here signs that says, 'Quiet is requested for the benefit of those who have retired!' "

WELL, YOU GOT THERE.

Lack of space prevents my recounting any more of the little incidence of our little trip at this writing, but sufficient to say that we blundered into Belleair a half a day late or practically on time none the better for the adventure.

St. Valentine's Laugh

By Elwood D. Ullman Jr.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY may be traced back to the time when men were gorillas. A caveman would return home with a basket of dinosaur cutlets under his arm for the evening meal and greet his wife by fetching her a wholesome wallop across the shoulder-blades with a length of elephant tusk. Sometimes he would kill his wife and sometimes she would recover, but it was all done in the spirit of affection, and the custom has been handed down to us with minor variations. The plaster age is now the plastic age; and instead of saying it with missles, we use missives.

There was a lot of poetry in the caveman's demonstration, and much of this sentiment has evaporated with the years. Nowadays, a man sends a love-note to his wife or sweetheart and then forgets about it and is liable to spend the day fuming and frowning and bawling through a telephone transmitter. He has no more regard for humanity than Mr. Mencken.

This uncharitable attitude on St. Valentine's Day has been disparaged. Not long ago, a group of nice ladies met in an obscure Illinois town called Chicago and decided it would be too sweet for words if the spirit of St. Valentine's Day could be amplified somewhat. The occasion should be a time for happiness and blissful appreciation of the fact that one is able to pay his bills. It is not necessary that the wheels of industry cease turning, but the various cogs can go through the day with smiles and joyous spirits and maintain an attitude of sympathy toward their fellow cogs and cogettes. What these ladies wanted was MORE POETRY. And a man's words should harmonize with his feelings. Take some of the poetry out of valentines and inject it into practical life.

PROMPTLY at 7 o'clock on St. Valentine's Day the alarm clock rings its joyous tidings and the business man hops blithely out of bed, despite the fact that the temperature is 14 degrees above zero, and capers about in his pajamas without entertaining a sole dark thought concerning the janitor. He makes his appearance at the breakfast table and rubs his hands in anticipation of an appetizing meal consisting of a cup of pale coffee and a three-minute egg boiled by guess-work.

"'Smatter with you, you big rummy?" asks his wife. "Why the exuberance? When I left you last night, you were notching up your chin with a razor and the language you used would have made a sea parrot sound like a traveling evangelist."

The man leans over the table, pats his wife's hand and says:

"But this, my dear, I'm glad to say,
Is Valentine's—a happy day—
You look as lovely as a dream,
So pass the sugar, pass the cream."

There is precious little cream which finds its way to the gentleman, owing to the fact that his wife is unnerved and has spilled most of it, but the gentleman doesn't comment and eats his breakfast with relish. Then he throws his overcoat about his shoulders with an elfin movement, although he weighs in the neighborhood of 220 pounds, blows a dainty kiss to his wife and waltzes out to the garage where he spends the next forty minutes choking his automobile. Finally he gets the thing started and he feels so enthusiastic and full of joy and the gladness of living that he hums merrily through the streets and ignores two stop signs with a policeman hidden behind the second.

RIGHT gaily after him tears the policeman, but the business man waves his hand with childish abandon and steps on the accelerator. The cop enters into the spirit of the thing, mounts his motorcycle and playfully chases the business man. Catching up, he warbles:

"Good morn, fair sir, now I must pray,
One moment ere you wend your way,
You've travelled here at fifty per,
The Judge with thee would fain confer."

But the offender smiles blandly, hands the policeman a cigar and replies:

"Good cop, these words they grieve me sore,
Thou know'st the best of us do err,
Methinks thine eyes are filled with soap,
Be on thy way and take this rope."

The policeman delivers the next stanza by hopping on the running-board and creasing the driver's hat with his cudgel. They whirl off to the court-house where a good-

THE CHANG-WHA PEARL

By H. D. Couzens

Tradition Said That He Who Tried to Steal This Gem Would Die in the Attempt—That Was True—And There Were Many Other Strange Adventures.

"'TELL ME,' said Captain Atkinson, 'have you ever seen the gem called the—ah—the Chang-Wha Pearl?' 'Twice,' said Quong."

THE greatest man in China took a sip of tea from a tiny bowl as dainty and frail as the half of an eggshell. The bouquet of the tea filled the room like the perfume of flowers.

"I think you will find no obstacles, Captain." His voice was pleasing; he spoke in his own tongue with occasional interpolations of English, a language of which he was supposed to be ignorant.

"You will take the pearl to England and place it in the hands of Sir Philip, who will be informed of the gift by a dispatch sent through the mail. Your steamer will arrive in three days and leave at midnight."

The minister held in his hand an exquisite and filigreed jewel case. He pressed a spring and the case flew open, disclosing a pearl of the bigness of a hamburg grape. It was a rich lustrous pink in color. Upon it was a curious splotch of red as if it had been actually a part of the nacreous substance, an unmistakable freak of nature.

"There are men here in China who would pay an immense fortune to possess this pearl," continued the minister. "I presume you know something of the history of the Chang-Wha Pearl?"

"Not I," replied the Captain. "I don't care a jot for the bally things. Sir Philip, I think, is daffy over them."

"The Chang-Wha Pearl," said the minister, "as it is called, was found during a local war in the region of Chang-Wha, three centuries ago. In one of the forays a fleeing man was cut down by a Manchu warrior. The man was carrying a bundle which proved to be a dead baby, richly dressed and ornamented, and as the warrior stooped over his victim the infant's tiny hand opened and this pearl rolled out. The Manchu tried to wipe off the blood's stain, and, finding it indelible, was overcome with superstitious fear and took the pearl to his commander. In the fire and pillage all opportunity to identification of the dead baby or the man who carried it was lost, and no previous history of the pearl ever came to light.

"IT EVENTUALLY passed into the royal treasury, where it has since remained. It has been worn only at coronations, has achieved notoriety, as great jewels have a way of doing, and is considered a luck charm as well as an emblem of prosperity. There is, however, one interesting tradition"——

"Oh, bother the traditions!"

The Captain spoke impatiently, but seeing the reproachful expression on the minister's face, said:

"Beg pardon, Excellency! Pray, go on!"

"The tradition is that he who tries to steal the Chang-Wha Pearl will die in the attempt. History confirms that. Seven men have tried to steal it and all died swiftly before they could make away with it.

"As you suggest, this is not particularly interesting, but I wish, Captain, to call your attention to this case. You see this spring on the front? It is there, in plain sight, where a spring should be, and you naturally press it to open the case. You must never press that spring." The minister's eyes gleamed as he leaned across the table.

"As you value your life, Captain—your life—you are not to press that spring. The real spring is here."

He took the captain's hand and pressed his finger on a certain spot in the filigree work at the back of the case.

Adrian worked the true catch several times; then tossed it on the table.

"All right. I have it!" said he. "But what would occur if I did press the wrong catch?"

"I believe it is your business to take and execute orders," said the minister tartly, "not to ask questions."

"RIGHT. 'Mine but to do and die!' Proceed with the orders, your Excellency!"

"No one knows that the Pearl is going to Sir Philip save the Empress, you and myself. I do not believe, as I have said, that there will be any impediments, but secrets become known, especially in the present state of unrest, and you will of course take your own precautions.

"Come here, by the private entrance, an hour before the steamer sails and the pearl will be delivered to you. Six men of the Imperial Secret Service will follow you unseen to the steamer. From then onward you will require no protection other than your own resources and courage, which"—the minister bowed gravely—"we have always found infallible."

"I thank your Excellency. Good night, sir!"

"Good night!"

The minister extended his hand. "And Captain—as a final reminder! Beware of that false spring!"

On leaving the minister's house the Captain lit a cigar and strolled about for a time, his brow wrinkled in thought.

AFTER a half-hour of strolling he found himself in a maze of mean foul-smelling little streets and alleys, lined with small stores and unclean tea shops. He picked his way to a slightly broader and less maculate thoroughfare and paused before a dark shop through whose dingy window could be seen a display of varnished pigs, dried ducks, water-nuts and mushrooms, mingling democratically with lacquered stools, boxes and other wares of the cheapest kind. At his second knock there was the sound of a loud, animal yawn from within, the padding of straw sandals and a gabbled question. He responded in Chinese and the door was cautiously opened by a fat Chinaman, apparently very sleepy.

The shop was stuffy with the sickish Oriental odor. The fat Chinese led the way to a door at the rear, then through a long narrow passage to another door, behind which was a heavy curtain. This he held aside and Captain Atkinson passed into a large, well-lighted room, high-ceiled and furnished with astonishing richness. Heavy gold and silk embroideries and brocades hid the walls.

At a desk in a corner of the room a Chinaman, in purple brocade, sat peering through a microscope, a litter of slides and paraphernalia about him.

QUONG LEE was an Oxford graduate and an athlete; also a man deep in intrigue of local affairs. He dealt in everything under the sun. In his outer shop you might buy a package of punk sticks for a couple of cash; in the inner one you might negotiate for the purchase of a province.

"Ah, Quong," said the Captain, "at your favorite hobby, I see."

"Good evening, Captain. Yes, the microscope interests me. It is the greatest factor in the world's progress at present. I've just received a new stain—carbolfuchsin, it is called; the invention of a German scientist. Would you care to see it?"

"No, thanks. Don't understand the blooming thing in the least, and I've something else on hand, Quong. Tell me, have you ever seen, by chance, the gem called the—ah—the Chang-Wha Pearl?"

"Twice," said Quong.

Quong Lee produced a gold cigarette case from his voluminous sleeve, tendered the Captain a Turkish cigarette and lit one himself.

"Pray continue, Captain!"

ADRIAN ATKINSON had been a subaltern in the British Army till, in an obscure campaign in the hills, a bullet from a stolen Snider in the hands of a lone sniper had whined by obliquely and in passing flicked at one of his eyes, destroying its usefulness forever. It was an inglorious affair, but it ruined Adrian's career in the Army and he was retired with the rank of Captain.

Captain Atkinson was determined to seek some field for his services in the Far East. He was, therefore, greatly pleased at receiving an offer of employment from the man whom, next to "Little Bobs" he admired most.

Sir Philip Dart had spent a lifetime in China. A wise, able and astute politician, he was a man born to direct great affairs, and in China had found his field. He loved the country and its people, an important factor in his ultimate success. He had lived and dressed in Chinese fashion and had a profound knowledge of the Chinese language and dialects.

He became adviser to the Inner Council, one of the few white men ever wholly trusted by an Oriental nation, holding their entire confidence and respect. He was, in fact, the one man who stood as a buffer for many years between China and the nations of Europe.

CAPTAIN ATKINSON was a distant relative of whose conduct Sir Philip had taken notice from time to time, and when the young man's army career was cut short, he chanced to find himself in need of an assistant who was brave and discreet. He used Adrian, at first as a kind of under-secretary and bearer of messages of minor importance, until he proved worthy of a greater trust.

Adrian had been with him 10 years when Sir Philip, after 40 years of honorable service, decided to retire and pass his declining years in the land of his birth. His services had been liberally, indeed lavishly, rewarded, and he returned to England a rich man. Yet he departed from China leaving that which his heart most desired—the Chang-Wha Pearl. The wise minister, the greatest man in China, knew Sir Philip's desire.

Sir Philip bore a commission to England. His official retirement was not to occur till he had met and conferred with a few great men over a secret affair of the gravest importance to China, and so great were his services to the Chinese nation in the fulfillment of this last act of trust that the wise minister remembered. There was but one adequate reward—the Chang-Wha Pearl; and Captain Atkinson, retained as a secret agent of the ministry, was selected to deliver the gem to Sir Philip.

There were few passengers on the Orient Queen, for it was not the tourist season. Adrian found himself seated near the captain of the steamer, an old acquaintance. Across the table, a few seats removed, was a short slight weather-brown man with a sunburnt beard and shrewd twinkling eyes. When, at their first meal, the table cleared he glanced at Adrian, smiling.

"Captain Atkinson, I believe," said he, offering a card. It read:

Sir Hubert Mackintosh, F. R. G. S.

"SAW your name on the passenger list," continued Sir Hubert, "and was pleased to find we were at the same table. I have heard of you often, Captain Atkinson."

"And I of you, Sir Hubert," returned Adrian warmly, "and read your charming book."

In the smoking-room they fell into talk. Sir Hubert had achieved some celebrity as an explorer and soldier of fortune, and his recent book was a rare contribution to the world's knowledge of ethnology. He proved to be an interesting companion, with a great deal of charm and a keen strong insight into the heart. He had, moreover, that suggestion of reserve force that stamps the man who has done things.

Among others who frequented the smoking-room was a tall thin yellow man dressed in immaculate flannels who had evidently been long in China, for he seemed well informed on Oriental topics.

He played cards a great deal, occasionally a bitterly contested game with a half-caste Chinese named Charlie Chong. Both men, Adrian noticed, were expert players, though the half-caste, with his unruffled placidity, invariably had a shade the better of his opponent.

Sir Hubert Mackintosh knew the pair.

"TALLBOYS," he frankly confided, "is a bad egg. Came out as a remittance man, was fired from the consular service for selling secrets though he still claims a connection, and his principal business is smuggling opium to Hawaii. Probably on his way now to make a deal in it."

"How about the half-caste," said Adrian, "are they in together?"

"I hardly think so. Chong, for all his Chinese blood, is head and ears over Tallboys. Known as a pearl buyer and has engineered some big deals. He is the chap who made the raid on the Japanese pearlers last year at Thursday Island — you must have heard of that. His business is a bit queer, but it's big business and he's never been caught in anything crooked. Charlie's a good sport."

Adrian watched all the other nondescript travelers covertly and listened to their talk, endeavoring to discover who, aboard the Orient Queen, were his enemies. For enemies there were without a doubt, with every sense alert to steal the Chang-Wha Pearl. He received a demonstration on the third day at sea.

HE HAD slipped off the heavy boots he had been wearing for a pair of rubber-soled shoes, left his stateroom, carefully locking the door, and taken his regular afternoon "constitutional" 30 times around the main deck. In the smoking room afterwards he had found Sir Hubert, who entertained him with a protracted, though interesting account of a hunt.

When he returned to his cabin his door was locked as he had left it. He sat on the transom berth to undress, when his foot kicked the boots he had exchanged for yachting shoes. He picked them up and set them out of the way. Then a sudden thought struck him. The boots were not where he had left them. Adrian was very precise and fastidious over small matters of dress, and he remembered having placed the boots under the lower end of the transom; yet here they were, kicking about under his feet!

He picked them up and looked them over. In each heel two holes were neatly bored with a small awl or gimlet!

A few nights later he sat in a game of bridge with Sir Hubert Mackintosh as partner, playing against a drummer for electric supplies and an old army chaplain who was returning home, retired. They played till 11, when the lights were extinguished. Afterward, the drummer and chaplain having retired, Adrian and Sir Hubert took several turns about the deck, smoking and talking till close to midnight.

ADRIAN had a stateroom to himself, between decks. By arrangement with the steward he kept the door locked, though he felt it to be a useless precaution; and he slept with his revolver strapped to his wrist. Sitting on the edge of his berth he stripped to the waist.

Resting against his left pectoral muscle, close under his arm, and held in place by a strap over his shoulder and another around his body, was a pocket of soft, pliable leather. From this he took the inlaid jewel case of the Chang-Wha Pearl, snapped it open for a minute, exposing the gem within, then closed and replaced it. He was reaching for the tunic of his pajamas when he caught something out of the tail of his good eye that caused a slight chill to play up and down his naked back.

His port light was open. It was in the sheer side of the ship, a good 30 feet above the water, yet through it a face was peering at him. Adrian did not start nor look toward the port. Whistling softly, he calmly finished his preparations for the night, bathed his face and hands, turned off the light and rolled into his berth. Through the open port he could see the moonlit sky unobstructed. There was nothing there now.

• • • •

It was 8 o'clock at night when the ship docked at Honolulu. She was to sail early in the morning, and most of the through passengers, eager to attend the band concert and dance at the hotel or drive to the beach, soon left the ship. The captain and officers, save those on watch, also went ashore.

Adrian preferred to remain aboard in a deck chair. He believed that an attempt would be made to rob him of the pearl when the ship was close to San Francisco, where the thieves could easily lose themselves, but it might occur at any time and he felt he was taking fewer chances by staying aboard the ship. He knew that he was watched.

Soon Sir Hubert appeared.

"JUST going hunting for you, Captain. The steward said you were aboard. Come up to the smoker. They're entertaining a couple of queer chaps, friends of Charlie Chong's—a real Hawaiian Prince, one of the last of the Kamahamehas, and a sugar magnate. No end of money, both. Interesting chaps; come along and let's look 'em over!"

In the smoking room they found the party in a state of mild hilarity. Champagne had been flowing freely. The prince, a fat brown man, with innumerable wreaths of carnation and maile about his head and shoulders, was ponderously executing some steps of the hula dance to shouts of applause. The merriment halted for a time, while Adrian was introduced to Prince Solomon Puaolani and Mr. Oscar Blades, the latter a sunbaked man with puttees and a riding-whip. There were half a dozen others in the party, including Tallboys and Charlie Chong. A sickly missionary sat at one side, gravely puffing at his pipe. Adrian found himself seated in a corner behind a table, with Sir Hubert Mackintosh on his left. The steward appeared with more drinks. Prince Solomon deposited himself heavily in a chair, his moon face half buried in flowers, fanning himself.

"I'm too fat to dance any more," said he, absorbing a glass of champagne in a single swallow.

THE steward appeared with more champagne and a towering platter of sandwiches. Adrian took Scotch and soda in a tall glass. The party waxed more hilarious and the stories grew increasingly flagrant. Some of the weaker heads sought their berths. When the steward informed the rest that, because of the captain's absence, the smoking lights must be extinguished at the usual time, there were left only Prince Puaolani, Blades, Tallboys, Chong, Sir Hubert and Adrian. The missionary had left the room, and Adrian could see him dimly through the window, pacing moodily up and down the deck.

"Buy some pearls, Prince," said Charlie Chong. He sat at the end of the table in his favorite attitude, his chair tilted back, thumbs in the waistband of his trousers. He brought the chair down with a thump. Although half English, his eyes and smile were Chinese.

"I'll sell you some that are A No. 1 first chop!" he continued.

The missionary, pacing the deck began to whistle "Ben Lomond" softly. He seemed to be the only one about; but presently a quartermaster put his head in at the door, saw it and passed on to the bridge.

Chong spread a handkerchief on a table, took a long "poke" of skin from his pocket, and poured a handful of pearls. "Take your choice," he said passing the handkerchief to the Prince.

Adrian could see that some of the pearls were very fine ones, but the Prince after a brief inspection pushed them aside largely.

"Chicken feed," he murmured apparently fuddled. "Dinky little things."

Sir Hubert and the planter pored over the handkerchief with the Prince, with a lazy and contemptuous sweep of his arm, picked up a small glass vial. But Adrian reached for the glass and charged it.

"THANK you," said he, "I never drink anything but Scotch. Some of these pearls appear fine, Sir Hubert, though I am no judge. That dusky one, there, seems to be worth at least a few hundred pounds."

"It's worth $3000 gold," said Sir Hubert quietly. "I know of only one that is finer—and that is the 'Chang-Wha Pearl.'"

"The Chang-Wha Pearl!"

Adrian straightened up quickly and stared at the speaker.

"Yes."

Chong was again tilted back comfortably in his chair.

"The Chang-Wha Pearl. Have you ever seen it, Captain?"

His voice was as soft as the purring of a cat. He surveyed Captain Atkinson with his half-closed lids and a bland smile.

"Why—why, I may have—once or twice."

Adrian hiccoughed a trifle and seemed to keep his eyes open with effort.

The Chang-Wha Pearl

put his head in at the door, withdrew it and passed on to the bridge.

Chong spread a handkerchief on the table, took a long "poke" of shark-skin from his pocket, and poured out a handful of pearls. "Take your choi'," he said passing the handkerchief to the Prince.

Adrian could see that some of the pearls were very fine ones, but the Prince after a brief inspection waved them aside largely.

"Chicken feed," he murmured, apparently fuddled. "Dinky little things."

Sir Hubert and the planter bent over the handkerchief with interest. The Prince, with a lazy and erratic sweep of his arm, picked up Adrian's glass vial. But Adrian reclaimed his glass and charged it.

"THANK you," said he. "I never drink anything but Scotch. Some of these pearls appear fine, Sir Hubert, though I'm no judge. That dusky one, there, ought to be worth at least a hundred pounds."

"It's worth $3000 gold," said Chong quietly. "I know of only one that is finer—and that is the Chang-Wha Pearl."

"The Chang-Wha Pearl!"

Adrian straightened up quickly and stared at the speaker.

"Yes."

Chong was again tilted back easily in his chair.

"The Chang-Wha Pearl. Have you ever seen it, Captain?"

His voice was as soft as the purr of a cat. He surveyed Captain Atkinson with his half-closed lids and a bland smile.

"Why—why, I may have—once, or twice."

Adrian hiccoughed a trifle and seemed to keep his eyes open with an effort.

"To be sure! Of course! An' a fine pearl it is, too!"

He spoke thickly and swayed forward in his seat. There was a swift exchange of glances about the table. The missionary had ceased whistling and stood in the doorway, his back to the room.

Tallboys gave a sudden, short laugh, his thin lips twitching in a cold sneer.

"I know you've seen it, Captain. I had information to that effect in Peking. Stories get around, you know. But you're among friends, Captain."

Captain Atkinson took another drink of Scotch. "Wh—what do you mean? What are you getting at?"

"I mean—" Tallboys had risen to his feet—"that you have with you the most remarkable pearl in the world; we're anxious to see it. All friends here, so, Captain, let us see the Chang-Wha Pearl!"

Sir Hubert smiled at Atkinson in a friendly way and placed a reassuring hand on his knee. "No harm in it, old man, if you really have the thing," he said in a low voice. "I'd be glad of the treat myself."

"All right, old chap, since you wish it. That confounded Scotch has gone to my head, but—"

He fumbled awkwardly in the fold of his shirt and in a moment drew from the hidden pocket the filigree jewel case.

"One look," said he with a reckless laugh, "only one! These things make men deuced covetous!"

And he opened the case so that all could see the great gem within. Then he quickly snapped it shut; his head fell forward limply on the table.

PRINCE SOLOMON made a clumsy catch at the case. Instantly Adrian was on his feet. His glasses fell off and his artificial eye glared at Solomon with a sinister glare.

"Hands off!" he cried. "You thief!"

He looked around wildly.

"Why, they're all thieves, Sir Hubert. I believe it's a plot—"

His revolver snapped harmlessly, as Charlie Chong leaped forward and threw himself on the hand that held the jewel case. Tallboys pinioned the other arm. Adrian's glass eye seemed to gleam more balefully.

"All right!" he cried. "You've got me, confound you! But that case! Look out for that. It's"—— Something struck him over the ear—something in the hand of Sir Hubert Mackintosh, so that he fell forward, inert and senseless, across the table. Almost as if on a signal the light went out. A moment later six men filed down the gangplank and were lost in the obscurity of the wharves.

When Adrian woke the late sun was streaming through the open port. His head ached amazingly. He rang for the room steward.

"Where are we?" he asked when the official appeared.

"A hundred miles out of 'Onolulu, sir. Are you feelin' well, sir? May I bring you somethink? You were a—a bit ill, I fancy, last night, sir, from what the deck steward"——

"Quite likely," said Adrian dryly. "Steward, is Sir Hubert on deck?"

"No, sir. Left us at 'Onolulu, quite unexpected; had booked through."

"Ah! And that missionary chap. The tall one who smoked a pipe and whistled through his teeth. Is he aboard?"

"Mr. Capers, sir? No, sir. He left at 'Onolulu, too. Most extrawdin'y. He was booked through, too, sir."

A BLACK yacht was speeding away, on the course west-southwest of Honolulu, as fast as her swift-running turbines could propel her.

Her wake creamed behind her as her slim cutwater sliced through the seas as smoothly as a knife goes through oil. Her lines were fine, but there the nattiness ended. It was long since her decks had known the touch of a holystone and the brass work was covered with paint.

Five men were seated around the cabin table of the Opae, while a steward entered freighted with bottles and glasses. A sixth man was visible in a stateroom noisily performing ablutions in a basin. The seated ones were those who had been known to Captain Atkinson as Sir Hubert Mackintosh, F. R. G. S.; Eugene Tallboys, Charlie Chong, Oscar Blades, the Hawaiian planter, and the consumptive missionary with the irritating whistle.

The sixth man, who presently appeared, wiping his face lustily with a towel, might have been the Hawaiian Prince, Solomon Puaolani, save that his brown color had disappeared, showing the features of a white man, continually greasy with perspiration, and of a strong Hebraic cast. By the transition he became Abraham Solomons, millionaire, well and unfavorably known in Hongkong.

Mr. Blades, having exchanged puttees and riding whip for a nautical uniform and visored cap, resumed his proper station as sailing master of Charlie Chong's yacht, the Opae. Mr. Capers, the pseudo missionary, sometimes mourned by swindled clients, had been known as "Tony" Barnette, a New York broker, whom Broadway had broken. Sir Hubert Mackintosh, in his own familiar waters, was better known as Benjamin Pease, master mariner, pirate and co-partner of Bully Hayes; resourceful and of superior endowments.

Mr. Eugene Tallboys was his own shady self—opium dealer and cadger for favors from more potent rascals than himself; a jackal whose teeth were exceedingly sharp. Of Chong's history enough has been said to suffice.

Mr. Abraham Solomons poured and swallowed a huge drink.

"OH, IT was easy—so easy!" he laughed unctuously. "He fell for it like a lamb; and there were all of us shaking for fear we'd have to kill the beggar. 'One look!' says he. 'Only one look!' and then—oh, my!" And he rocked with uproarious mirth.

Ben Pease gravely shook his head. "You fellows may be right, but it doesn't look good to me." It was too easy. I know that chap better than any of you, and if he's one of the silly-ass type, then I'm one, too. I tell you, it smells fishy."

"Huh!" grunted Solomons. "What's ailing you, Ben? We have the swag, haven't we, and a fortune apiece due from old Lee Toy and his crowd. Hand over the box, Charlie! Let's have a look-see!"

Charlie Chong placed the filigree jewel case reverently on the table. Once, twice, thrice, Solomons pressed the golden spring, the last time impatiently and with force, but the box did not open.

"Confound it! The thing's stuck!" he cried angrily.

"Let me have it!"

It was the cool dominating voice of Ben Pease. He extended his lean strong hand and Solomons, now trembling with vexation and impatience, flung the case toward him. Then he glanced at his thumb for an instant and irritably wiped off three tiny drops of blood.

Pease seemed to be in no haste. He turned the case about in his hands and examined it minutely with deep interest, testing it with cautious, sensitive fingers.

"Open it!" snarled Tallboys. "Open the thing up! Here, let me have it!" And he roughly snatched the case from Pease's hands.

Suddenly Solomons rose to his feet, gasping and clawing at his throat.

"WHAT'S this? My heavens, what's this?" he cried hoarsely, as he tore away the collar and neckband with a jerk. "Give me a drink, quick!"

They turned to him startled. His breath whistled in his throat. His coarse neck seemed to be swelling before their eyes. Pease poured whisky into a tumbler and he gulped it, spilling half down his shirt, his teeth chattering against the glass, which presently fell from his hand and smashed to atoms. His face grew dark with blood. He swayed ponderously, clutching the edge of the table.

"It's got me! Oh, heavens! it's got me. His eye, his cursed eye! Can't you see it? Look—ughr-r-r"——

His voice, which had risen to a shriek, died to a choking gurgle. His face was horribly blotched and bloated and streaming with sweat. A spray of saliva blew from his thick lips, and he fell crashing to the floor, where, after writhing and choking, with a final shudder he stiffened and lay still.

Capers, pale and shaking, poured water over his face, now terrible to see.

"It's no use," said Pease quietly. "He's dead."

"Apoplexy," said Tallboys coolly. "He's had a touch of it before. Poor old Abie couldn't stand excitement. Well, we can't help him now. Ugh! Throw something over his face. The man's a sight!"

Charlie Chong was sitting tilted back, his thumbs in his waistband. His eyes looked into those of Pease. Each pair held a meaning look that yet was a startled question.

"Poor old Abie!" Tallboys continued, lighting a cigarette. "He was a good chum and leaves a pot of money. Well, we're richer by his share in this little deal, eh, gentlemen?"

With a particularly evil grin he turned his back to the dead man and began fumbling at the catch of the jewel case with his thin yellow fingers. Of a sudden he flung it down as if it had been a snake.

"Ouch!" he yelled. "The damn thing's pricked me!"

"Oh, rot!" said Blades in disgust. "Here, let's have it! What a fuss you're making! Let's get at the pearl—the Chang-Wha Pearl!"

He and Capers reached out simultaneously, their eyes blazing with eagerness, and together they grasped the case. Pease sprang to his feet.

"Stop it!" he cried. "Tony! Blades! Drop that thing! It's poisoned! Drop it, you cursed fools—drop it!"

BUT it was too late. Both men, in the eagerness of a none-too-friendly struggle, had pressed the spring repeatedly.

"Wh—what's that?" cried Capers in amazement. "Poisoned! What the"—

"Did it prick you, Tony? And you, Blades?"

Pease's voice had fallen tense and low.

"Well, I fear, Tony, you'll never see Broadway again. Blades, the medicine chest is in your room. Try a hypodermic of permanganate—and better cut off your thumbs, though I fear it will do no good."

Charlie Chong was leaning forward on the table staring in fascination at Tallboys, whose face had turned a sickly green as he gazed at his punctured thumb. He turned to Chong, shaking like a leaf.

"Why didn't you tell me, Charlie? You knew it, you half-caste dog! You knew it all the time, but you wanted to hog it all!"

"I did not know it," said Chong steadily. "It's Pease's idea. I'm not sure of it—yet!"

"Oh, my heaven, Charlie!" whimpered Tallboys between gasps, as he slid to the floor. "Oh, my heavens!" Pease and Charlie Chong sat opposite each other, the jewel case between them on the table. Pease looked at it with a shudder. His face had drawn into deep tense lines.

"I think I see," he said, "but only a part. The man played a game with us. But poison isn't a white man's weapon and Atkinson"——

"Has spoiled a very pretty tradition," said Chong.

"It isn't a white man's way," continued Pease. "And so Atkinson—at the last—confound it, Charlie, the man tried to warn us; you remember?"

"No, I don't see. I don't see why he should warn us when we had stolen the case. And now we'll just get at the pearl inside!"

He found a small hatchet and, laying the case on its side, split it with a single blow. A great pearl, with a bloody smear on it, rolled out on the table cloth. He picked it up and turned it about in his fingers for some moments, his face going dark, then yellow-white.

"What is it?" cried Pease. "What's the matter?"

CHONG continued to stare at the gem with a painful fascination. He wet his finger at his lips and drew it across the bloody smear several times without result. Then he dipped it into a glass of raw Scotch whisky that stood near, repeated the rubbing, and under his finger the mark of the Bloody Pearl of China dimmed and faded into nothing. He leaped to his feet—Chong, the imperturbable, the emotionless! And then flung the pearl at Pease.

"Matter! Matter!"

His voice broke into shrieking falsetto.

"You want to know what's the matter! Well, the matter is that that thing—that's just killed four men—the Chang-Wha Pearl—is a fish pearl! A fish pearl! Do you hear? The joke's on us! Ha, ha, ha!"

A while later the steward, fancying he heard a summons, found in the cabin four dead men in tortured attitudes; a living man rocking to and fro in hysterical laughter; and another with a wild light in his eye who chewed savagely on a cold cigar and ground something viciously into the floor with his foot.

* * * * *

Captain Adrian Atkinson, the stains of travel only partially obliterated, was ushered at once, upon delivery of his card, into Sir Philip Dart's library. Sir Philip beamed on him with outstretched hands.

"Adrian, my dear boy! I'm so glad to see you! Sit down, sit down. Now, tell me what you are doing in this part of the world—that is, if you may discreetly. I'm only a private citizen now, and not entitled to its secrets."

"Haven't you heard, sir?"

"Not a word. I had no idea of your whereabouts. I'm out of the news zone, except what I glean from the daily papers, and, of course, they only touch the outside of things. The way they treated the allied armies' mess was merely amusing."

"There should have been a dispatch explaining—by Jove, Sir Philip, I've probably beaten it to England. That leaves me at a loss"——

"Wait a moment; it may be here," interrupted Sir Philip.

HE TURNED to a pile of correspondence with which he had been busy before Adrian's arrival. From a large envelope he drew forth a document with a single large seal. The characters were Chinese.

"H'm! H'm!" ejaculated Sir Philip, as he read. "This may have some bearing on it. It appears to be only a semi-official document. It states that a messenger will call on me and place in my hands—h'm—a certain object which is to be considered a token of appreciation of services rendered to a grateful nation; that on account of its nature the token had best not be specifically mentioned, and that an official document of presentation will follow when it is known that the messenger has fulfilled his mission. H'm! H'm! A trifle ambiguous, I must say. I can't conceive—but I presume you hold the solution of this, Adrian?"

"I fancy I do, Sir Philip."

Adrian took a small object from his vest pocket, carefully polished it with a silk handkerchief, and laid in the palm of his former chief—the Chang-Wha Pearl. Sir Philip looked at it and started.

"Good Lord!" said he. "Why—why—why—Adrian! It's the Chang-Wha Pearl!

"And this is for me—from the Empress? Why?"

"For services rendered, I believe," replied Adrian, and repeated the little he had heard from the Chinese Minister.

Sir Philip listened, pacing back and forth, now and then looking lovingly at the pearl. When Adrian finished he regarded him quizzically.

"My boy," said he, "I don't believe you have a sentiment or much emotion about you. You walk in here and prosaically hand me from your pocket that lovely thing, which I consider the finest of the three most beautiful pearls in the world, as if you were delivering the mail! By the way, there was a case belonging to the pearl—a most malign thing. I trust they destroyed it. Tell me, did you actually bring that pearl all the way from China in your waistcoat pocket?"

"Hardly. I should have lost it. There was a case—the original one"—

"Yes, yes! What of it?"

"It was stolen from me. Quite a regrettable affair. It was a most remarkable piece of work, that case."

Sir Philip rubbed his hands.

"Ah! So there have been adventures by the way? Tell me about them."

He rang a bell and a servant brought adequate articles on a tray. Adrian, fortified by a draft from a tall glass of Scotch and soda and a few inhalations of a cigarette, began his story.

"His Excellency assured me in the beginning that no one was in the secret but Her Majesty, himself and me. He seemed to think, moreover, that some dinky mechanism in the false spring of the case would be some protection. I had a suspicion that the thing was poisoned, but that was not my affair. At any rate, I had no faith in it, and called on Quong Lee. I had an idea of my own, you see; so I asked Quong Lee if he had ever seen the Chang-Wha Pearl. Fortunately, he had. You know Quong, sir—safe as a father-confessor.

"I ASKED Quong to procure for me an imitation of the Chang-Wha Pearl. In the present state of affairs in China there is a good deal of intriguing, inside and out, and I have been keeping in touch with the police and secret service for several years. I fancied I knew the men who might try for the pearl. Quong got the fish pearl, but we had the deuce of a time getting the blood smear on it. Most everything we tried refused to take hold, and shrank up in pin-point drops as if the pearl were greased. Then Quong thought of a stain he was trying on microscope slides; carbol something or other, and it worked like a charm. The stain was soluble only in alcohol, so there was no fear of its rubbing off, and I knew if I got through alive the big pearl was safe!

"On shipboard I recognized some of my fellow passengers at once. You see, I've been keeping a systematic 'Who's Who' of the shady chaps who are in crooked deals of the larger sort.

"There was a man named Tallboys, an opium smuggler; Charlie Chong, who owns the notorious yacht, Opae; a consumptive chap whom I didn't suspect until later, and a man who introduced himself as Sir Hubert Mackintosh, the explorer. I had seen him in court once in a barratry case. He wasn't Sir Hubert at all, though he looked a lot like the photo in his book. He was Ben Pease, the shifty little pirate—a mighty capable man.

"There were two more who came aboard at Honolulu. One they introduced as some bally Kanaka Prince or other, but he hadn't blacked up carefully enough. I could see white in the orifice of his ears.

"Between the lot they got the case away from me. That's about all, sir."

"All!" exclaimed Sir Philip. "Good gracious, man! How did they get the case? Oh, go on!"

"They tried it at Honolulu because we arrived there at night and I felt safer aboard, I fancy. They got talking of pearls, then of the Chang-Wha Pearl, drugged my whisky, which I poured on the floor, and got me to give them a glimpse of the pearl in the case. Then they black-jacked me"——

"A glimpse of the pearl?"

"Yes, the fish pearl. It was in the case, you know. That's what they stole and got away with, and I was glad when it was over that I got no worse than a swipe with a blackjack. My head ached for a few days, and that was the end of it. If it had been San Francisco"——

"But the pearl, man! The real pearl! What of it?"

CAPTAIN ATKINSON grew more ill at ease. He puffed nervously at his cigarette, and his face reddened.

"It is—ah—rather a delicate subject, Sir Philip. May we not avoid it?"

"Young man, if I should die this minute without knowing where you hid that pearl, I'd come back and haunt you till you told. Out with it!"

Adrian poured another drink.

"Very well, sir, if you must have it! I wear, as you know, an artificial eye—a thin shell, like the deep bowl of a small teaspoon. Well, I carried your pearl in the—hang it!—in the socket behind. Ugh! It was deucedly disagreeable, I assure you!"

St. Valentine's Day

Far less thrifty than the prudent Pepys was the first so to be chosen by lot as a lover, and far before the first Valentine—the good priest himself. The old Romans had a festival which seemingly dated from the earliest days of Rome—the Luperci. Back in the dim mists of time it came into being possibly as a worship of the wolf that suckled Romulus and Remus. Or perhaps from the worship of Mars to whom the wolf was sacred. In that festival the names of girls were drawn by boys in a lottery—the names of boys by girls.

Christianity sought to take over the old Pagan festivals of Rome into the church's scheme of things. The festival of Luperci fell in the middle of February. St. Valentine had been beheaded on February 14. So to the memory of the good saint was assigned that day and back in the early centuries of Christianity the ancient and persistent custom, now associated with the saint's day, was interwoven in the popular imagination with his name. St. Valentine, for all we know, may have been a misogamist, but thanks to the ancient gods it is to him today that lovers say their prayers.

St. Valentine's Laugh

humored Judge beams down at the offender and demands a pair of green valentines, the business man trips away to his office and enters with a graceful bound.

"Good morning, Miss Tick!" he chirps. "Take these valentines!"

The stenographer has been lolling back in her chair, chewing gum, reading a magazine and maintaining a congressional air in general. In her astonishment she loses her poise, her gum and her place in the magazine. But this is no hallucination, for her employer is dictating:

"To Oliver Smith and Julius Jones:
You owe this firm four thousand bones.
With joy and bliss my glad heart thrums.
It's time you paid your bills, you bums."

"To Henry Black, at Cleveland, O.:
We thank you for your order, oh.
Am shipping goods by morning train.
With kindest wishes we remain."

"To Oscar Blott, Chicago, Ill.:
We note you send another bill;
The bill was paid the fifth of June,
You think I'm crazy as a loon?"

AT THIS juncture, the stenographer collapses and the business man sends her away to a hospital and then goes out to grab a bite of lunch. With many apologies, kind words and smiles he patiently stands in line for three hours awaiting his turn at a table. He sits down, placing his elbow in a bowl half-full of oyster soup which has been left by a previous customer.

Utterly unmindful of black, tin-like fried potatoes and rubberized steak, the gentleman tips the waitress fifty cents and two quatrains of poetry.

At five o'clock, the gentleman leaves his office and finds his automobile suffering with a frozen mixture. He goes home on a street-car, where someone stabs him in the eye with an umbrella and rubs the shine off of his shoes and he stands next to a man who is carrying four pounds of sturgeon.

Arriving home, he discovers an atmosphere of cheerfulness about the place; a log fire crackling merrily, the furniture polished, and supper on the table. His wife is awaiting him.

"COME, my prince," she calls. "They told me I made a mistake, but I knew all along you were an angel. This is the dress I wore when we ran away." As the gentleman is about to hand his wife a five-pound box of candy, the clock strikes the hour of six. The day is legally dead. The gentleman promptly hurls the box against the wall, and, as bonbons and chocolates rain about the premises, the smile fades from his countenance. His features twist into venomous contortions. He bares his teeth; and low, animal mutterings rattle in his throat.

His wife grows pale and retreats, completely forgetting the rest of the pretty speech framed for his welcome.

"Go," says the man tensely. "I'm glad this day is over. For the past 10 hours I've been letting my words harmonize with my feelings. That's all over now. Go. Get out of my sight. You'd better get out of my hearing, too, while you're at it."

The most business men can get out of St. Valentine's Day is a legal holiday. Right now, the occasion is one of those "holidays" such as Columbus Day, Groundhog Day and the Second of January, when there is no reason in the world for a man to work but he is constrained to work on account of convention.

ENDED HIS RHEUMATISM!
"I am eighty-three years old and I doctored for rheumatism over since I came out of the army, over 50 years ago. Like many others, I spent money freely for so-called 'cures' and I have read about 'Uric Acid' until I could almost taste it. I could not sleep nights or walk without pain; my hands were so sore and stiff I could not hold a pen. But now I am again in active business and can walk with ease or write all day with comfort. Friends are surprised at the change. You might just as well attempt to put out a fire with oil as try to get rid of your rheumatism, neuritis and like complaints by taking treatment supposed to drive Uric Acid out of your blood and body. It took Mr. Ashelman fifty years to find out the truth. He learned how to get rid of the true cause of his rheumatism, other disorders, and recover his strength, from 'The Inner Mysteries,' now being distributed free by an authority who devoted over twenty years to the scientific study of this trouble. The brilliant society women you read about and envy, keep the appearance of youth the way explained here.

The pretty, youthful stage star you so admire may be older than you, only she doesn't show it. This advertisement tells why.

Read this advertisement, learn about the rejuvenating hair cosmetic which restores original color naturally and safely. Then mail coupon for the Free Trial Bottle which proves every statement true.

If you could look like this, wouldn't it make an enormous difference in your life and insure happiness? You can—if you read what I tell you here.

A Youth Talk

BY MARY T. GOLDMAN

DO you realize that many of the admired queens of the stage and screen would be quite gray if they did not know how to stop it?

They can't afford to let nature take its course and make them middle aged. They know only too well that new stars are waiting to take their place.

You—the woman in private life—don't you too dread gray hair and middle age? It may not mean the loss of a job and public admiration, but it certainly puts you on the shelf.

So, why not follow the example of the clever women, who must keep their youth or let some younger women take their place? That's the restoration of gray hair, which, though often premature, is accepted as the first sign of age.

Do this first

Fill out coupon, mail it. (If possible enclose lock of hair in your letter.)

By return mail you'll receive my Special Patented Free Trial Kit, containing free trial bottle of the hair cosmetic used by up-to-date women in every walk of life.

With it come full directions for testing on a single lock of hair. In this way you learn for yourself how easily, how quickly, you can get rid of all gray.

The restoration of a single lock proves that gray hair is an unnecessary affliction, at any age. You know you needn't envy young looking women any more, because you share their secret.

What it is

A scientific preparation, as clean and colorless as water. (Nothing to make your hair sticky, nothing to wash or rub off.)

It's applied like water—simply by combing through the hair. Nothing to interfere with shampooing, with curling or waving. Treatment leaves your hair silky and glossy, just a little prettier than ever before.

Restored color is perfect in all cases—no streaking, discoloration or that terrible dyed look which is so unnatural and unbecoming. (If you've used some unsatisfactory dye with this unfortunate result, here's the remedy. This is corrected as easily as gray hair is restored.)

Wonderful, isn't it? And almost too good to be true. But it's a miracle that hundreds of thousands have already proved. They have accepted the free trial offer, as I ask you to do. Then say good-bye forever to ugly, unbecoming, aging gray hair!

The famous name

It's Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer, the most popular preparation of its kind in the world.

I perfected the formula many years ago, when my own hair turned prematurely gray. My great success encouraged me to offer my wonderful discovery to all who were gray.

How they welcomed the dainty preparation which was such a contrast to those other crude dyes which refined people have always found so repulsive! And though the years have brought competition from imitators, Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer keeps its supremacy and holds its place. I gave this marvelous preparation my own name because I was proud of my achievement and proud to have it known, so when you see Mary T. Goldman's on the bottle and the carton you know it's not just a trade name but my very own.

Now, mail the coupon

Tear it out now, before you turn to another page. You surely want to know how stars of the stage and screen, leading society women, up-to-date business girls, keep their hair from turning gray.

By return mail you'll receive the Special Patented Free Trial Kit, which explains all. For the single lock test is positive proof that every word I say, every statement made in this advertisement is absolutely true. It would be folly to make claims that couldn't be backed up. This free trial is your guarantee.

Then when you know that gray hair can be restored to its original color easily and surely, with absolutely perfect results, get a full-size bottle of Mary T. Goldman's from your druggist. If he can't supply you, or offers something he says is "just as good," walk out of the store. Just go home and write a letter to Mary T. Goldman, St. Paul, Minn., and order your full-size bottle direct. It will come by return mail prepaid.

So many users prefer to order direct that an order blank is always enclosed with the trial kit. Save it and use it, if you find it more convenient. It's your protection and your assurance of getting the real thing.

So, your first step is signing and sending the coupon. All the information you're so eager to get comes by return mail. Tear it out, fill it out, now!

Gray Bobs won't do

If you're longing for a smart bob, your first step must be restoration of your gray hair.

That's because short hair is a youthful style never intended for gray heads. So take your choice—wear it long or do what I've told you here.

She speaks for a big family

This family at 2309 Salisbury St., St. Louis, has had a wide experience with REM. Four generations of them have used it and had it bring them relief from their coughs.

From great-grandmother, right down to the great-grandchildren, they've used it,--used it with such good results that now the grandmother, Mrs. Jennie Keyes, says:

"Four generations of us have taken Rem in this home and it's never failed us. I was the first to use it but since then my mother, my children and my grand-children have all used it too.

"Almost every year from Fall till Spring I get one cough after another. I seem particularly susceptible to Winter coughs and colds.

"Last winter someone told me about Rem and suggested I try it. I got a bottle of it at the C & R Drug Store at 23rd & Salisbury and was surprised and delighted at the relief it gave me from my coughing. It's really the only thing that's ever helped me."

In this climate few of us are lucky enough to escape the usual bad-weather coughs. But though we can't escape them, we can help to get rid of them quicker. A bottle of REM has quieted many a cough.

A special ingredient in REM—effective, harmless—is not found in ordinary cough syrups. Clinging to your throat as it is swallowed, REM spreads a soothing, healing film over the sore, inflamed membranes.

No Opiates in REM. And pleasant to take.

Ask your druggist for REM—the blue package with the round orange label. And you can have your money back if you want it—but you won't!

the truth about coffee secrets every woman should know!

Another Advantage of H & K Coffee is That it is Evenly Ground

Figure 1

Ordinary coffee mills in factories, stores, or homes, grind coffee unevenly. Then it is utterly impossible to make a good cup of coffee. Some grains are big and others small (like figure 1). Of course the tiny grains brew up quicker. So they overbrew, and make your coffee taste hard and bitter. The bigger grains brew slower and so do not brew enough to give you fully of their flavor.

In order to give you coffee that is evenly ground we developed the giant H & K steel cut PURIFYING GRINDERS. They blow out the chaff and powdered grains. They regrind the bigger ones. That is why H & K Coffee is EVEN-GROUND (like figure 2). So you get a uniform 100% brew from H & K—always.

Try this comparison. Look at H & K Coffee under a reading glass. Compare it with other coffees!

No wonder H & K makes a better cup, yes the finest cup of coffee in the world.

Another interesting secret about coffee, that every woman should know, will appear in this space, on this page, next Sunday. Look for it. Write us what you think of this series of true facts about coffee. Do you enjoy them?

"THIRTY-ONE YEARS IN FIRE SALVAGE WORK in Cincinnati and Indianapolis had taken toll of my vitality. My stomach especially was affected; indigestion threatened to become chronic. One of my friends insisted I give Fleischmann's Yeast a trial. I did so; every day for two months I took my three cakes religiously. Little by little I began to see results. Gradually my attacks of indigestion became less frequent—then disappeared entirely. I gained daily in energy. Yeast seemed to tone up my whole system." William Curran, Indianapolis, Ind.

They broadcast their remarkable experiences

"I HAD BEEN IN PERFECT PHYSICAL CONDITION and I was so strong that I could take a man of 210 pounds and lift him over my head. Then suddenly I became ill with constipation and digestive troubles. I suffered also from disagreeable skin eruptions. I tried many tonics; they did me no good. One day when I went to town I bought Yeast cakes and began eating them, three each day. Now indigestion, constipation and the ugly pimples are gone. I cannot express in words the good that Fleischmann's Yeast has done for me." Edwin L. Hedberg, Beltsville, Md.

How thousands conquered constipation, corrected skin and stomach disorders — found vitality undreamed-of — through one simple food

NOT a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense—Fleischmann's Yeast is simply a remarkable fresh food.

The millions of tiny active yeast plants in every cake invigorate the whole system. They aid digestion—clear the skin—banish the poisons of constipation. Where cathartics give only temporary relief, yeast strengthens the intestinal muscles and makes them healthy and active. And day by day it releases new stores of energy.

Eat two or three cakes regularly every day before meals: on crackers—in fruit juices, water or milk—or just plain, nibbled from the cake. For constipation especially, dissolve one cake in hot water (not scalding) before breakfast and at bedtime. Buy several cakes at a time—they will keep fresh in a cool dry place for two or three days. All grocers have Fleischmann's Yeast. Start eating it today!

And let us send you a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health, Health Research Dept. N903, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York.

"BEING A RUSSIAN NOBLEWOMAN, refugee of the Revolution, I escaped from Bolsheviks and reached Canada, a complete nervous wreck. I had no interest in life. Once, buying provisions, I saw Fleischmann's Yeast Cakes and tried them as nourishment. I ate three cakes daily. I noticed a strange change in myself and continued to eat Yeast. First came interest in my life, then in about three weeks, a new calm. Now I can appreciate the royal gift of life. I make a deep Russian bow to Fleischmann's Yeast—the marvelous nerve-food." Anna de Lozina-Losinsky, Toronto, Canada

"I WAS NOT EXACTLY SICK but I was tired and listless, no appetite, eyes dull and my skin sallow and unattractive. A neglect to keep my system in the condition it should be, led to constipation and its attending ills. Then I began eating three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast a day. After six weeks I was in love with life. I ate whatever I pleased and was never bothered with constipation. Eyes and complexion improved. Each day finds me on my toes ready to meet whatever it may bring forth." Lillian Hoffman, Rochester, N. Y.

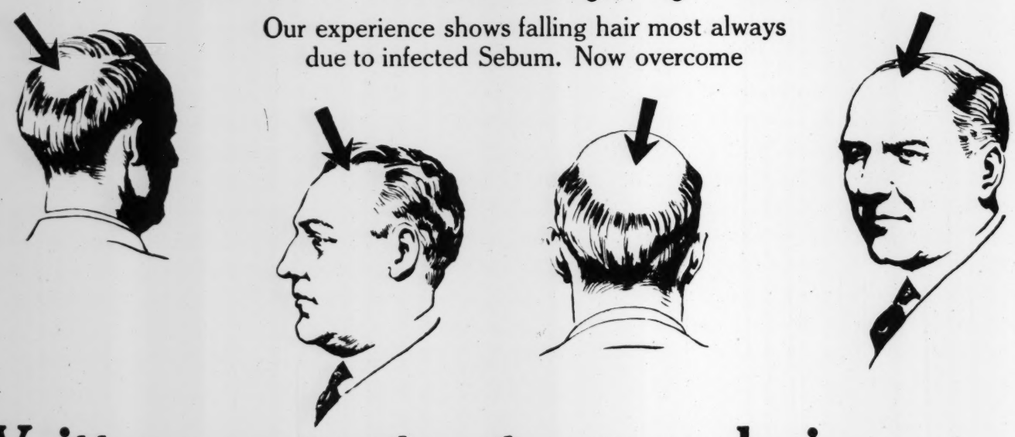
4 Men in 7 Bald at 40

Yet 91% Needlessly, by Tests

Our experience shows falling hair most always due to infected Sebum. Now overcome



Written guarantee to grow hair from your own druggist

New hair in 90 days—or money back

This is to offer you, under absolute money-back guarantee, the New Van Ess Treatment, which, under actual tests, grew hair on 91 heads in 100.

It embodies a new principle. A principle heretofore unknown to science. Now high authorities admit baldness may be greatly diminished. For hair roots rarely die from natural causes. And this method revives them. Test it yourself at our risk.

Hair Roots Rarely Die

We estimate that 4 men in 7 are bald, or partially bald, at 40. Our investigation proves this to be unnecessary. Proves only about 9 men in 100 need ever be bald!

Baldness is a symptom of a disease. Note this fact and mark it. It is most frequently a symptom of infection of the Sebum—the scalp oil.

Remove this infected Sebum and hair will almost always grow. Under the bald scalp the hair roots are generally alive. We have demonstrated this to be true in about 91% of our cases of falling hair or baldness.

We claim this new method reaches the roots. That it makes hair grow. But the public has often been deceived. So we guarantee it. You take no chance of loss. Over 1,000,000 men and women have made this test.

New Hair or No Money

We make our guarantee without reservation—without strings. It is absolute. We guarantee to stop falling hair. We guarantee to grow new hair in 90 days. Sometimes it grows much sooner. But usually this treatment requires about 3 bottles of Van Ess. If we fail, your money back without question.

Note that your own dealer gives the warrant with each 3-bottle purchase. Thus you assume no risk.

It is safe for us thus to guarantee the treatment. For experiments of years have proven it effective to us on 91 heads in 100. Foremost authorities approve it. Noted dermatologists now employ it—some charge as much as $300 for a similar basic treatment.

We offer it in correct form for home use, at the price of an ordinary "tonic."

The Infected Sebum

We have traced about 91% of all baldness and falling hair to Infected Sebum. It is an oil that forms at the roots of the hair. Its natural function is to lubricate the hair.

But Sebum cakes on the scalp. It forms a breeding place for bacteria. It clings to hair and destroys it. It lodges in hair follicles and plugs them. Then germs by the millions start to feed upon the hair. Loss of hair soon is marked. Then with neglect comes total baldness.

You can see this Sebum on your scalp, in the form of an oil. Or, when accumulated and dried, as dandruff. But it does not kill the hair roots. Hence when you remove it new hair has a chance to grow. This is a scientific fact—medical authorities will tell you so. You must remove the Infected Sebum.

Now We Remove It

For years science has experimented to combat Infected Sebum. We found a 91% effective treatment.

Now we have embodied it in a home treatment. It is called Van Ess Liquid Scalp Massage.

It is applied in a new way—a scientific way. (Note the illustration at right.) It penetrates to the follicles of the hair. It combats the Sebum and removes it. Results are marked. They are quick. It stops falling hair. We have demonstrated that it grows new hair.

We urge you to try this new way. We know the statements we make are amazing—almost incredible, but remember, we back them with an absolute guarantee.

189,000 women asked for it in the first 7 weeks

From Colorado, Connecticut, Florida and Maine, they wrote to New York for this new delicious dessert

"The odor is so fragrant and appetizing."

98% of those who comment on it say, "The fruit flavor is a revelation. It's the best I ever tasted!"

89% remark with delight on its fresh fruit taste.

99½ % emphasize its "fruity flavor and fragrance."

IT'S IN THE FLAVOR, made only from fresh fruits, that this marvellous difference lies. Tart refreshing lemons, golden oranges, the fresh delicious juices of strawberries, raspberries — from these alone come Royal Fruit Gelatin flavors. No "synthetics" or artificial flavorings are used. They could never duplicate that glorious fresh fruit taste, that fragrant aroma that arises directly you open the package.

The pure, perfect gelatin that carries these flavors has not spoiled nor altered them in any way. We are proud to offer Royal Fruit Gelatin to our Royal Baking Powder friends. We are delighted with their instant recognition of its qualities — their appreciation of the same high standards applied to a new line. From Brooklyn they write:

"I knew we would like it because we always use Royal Baking Powder, so went for this. It was even beyond our expectations."

"Like the Baking Powder, it's A 1," is the verdict from Westport, Conn.

From the East they write: "The flavor is like fresh fruit itself, the fragrance delicious. Royal Fruit Gelatin is the only kind I want."

From the West comes the message, "My family's cry is—'Royal, or none!'"

* * *

NOW it's in your own town, you can buy it today. Your grocer has the five delicious variations, Cherry, Raspberry, Orange, Strawberry, Lemon—each "just like the fruit it's flavored with." Get yours today — you'll be simply delighted with it.

ROYAL STRAWBERRY: "Its flavor is true to the fruit — no artificial taste at all," writes a delighted woman.

ROYAL ORANGE: "The children thought I had put fresh orange juice in it—" writes a mother enchanted with the fresh fruit flavor.

When the most glamourous picture is over—and you come outside to the bright lights and the brighter laughter of friends
—have a Camel!

WHEN the exciting scenes are over. And you leave the great theatre thrilled at what you've seen. When, as the organ peals forth its rolling music, you come outside with jovial, laughing friends—have a Camel!

For nothing else on earth could be so refreshing among the great white lights as Camel. Camel adds of its own bright goodness to the enjoyment of every pleasing scene. Camel is the hale friend and companion for eventful days and carefree evenings. Here is something worth writing in words of gold: "Camels never tire the taste, or leave a cigaretty after-taste, no matter how freely you smoke them." And what's more, you can't buy choicer tobaccos or more perfect blending, no matter how much you pay.

So, this night as you leave for the brilliant scenes. And when the big show is finished and you've seen life in its tense and purposeful moments—know then the mellowest fragrance that ever came from a cigarette.

Have a Camel!

No other cigarette in the world is like Camels. Camels contain the choicest Turkish and Domestic tobaccos. The Camel blend is the triumph of expert blenders. Even the Camel cigarette paper is the finest—made especially in France. Into this one brand of cigarettes is concentrated the experience and skill of the largest tobacco organization in the world.

Our highest wish, if you do not yet know Camel quality, is that you try them. We invite you to compare Camels with any cigarette made at any price.

CONFEREES BEGIN WORK OF REVISING HEAVY TAX CUTS VOTED BY SENATE

Deadlock at First Session on $125,000,000 Additional Reductions Voted by Senate.

SOME OF LEVIES MAY BE RESTORED

Joint Committee Probably Will Approve Imposts on Passenger Autos, Admissions and Dues.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—House and Senate conferees on the revenue bill ended their first two-hour session today in a deadlock over the Senate amendments which added $125,000,000 to the total amount of tax reduction voted by the House.

A considerable portion of the Senate increase appears to be doomed by the attitude of House leaders, who purpose to adhere to their own figures. Chairman Green of the Ways and Means Committee heading the House conferees, has declared that any increase over the $330,000,000 reduction proposed by the House not only threatens a Treasury deficit, but jeopardizes enactment of several pending bills calling for increased appropriations, including the public buildings bill.

Green also declared that while Government actuaries estimated the Senate bill would reduce taxes by $458,261,000 this calendar year, its actual reduction would amount to $630,000,000 annually when the bill goes fully into effect.

Support of G. O. P. Senators.

The House conferees also have more or less support from the three Republican representatives of the Senate, inasmuch as the major increases in reduction voted by the Senate were made on the votes of Democrats aided by some Republican insurgents.

The taxes, which seem most likely to be restored to the bill, possibly at lower rates, are those on automobile passenger cars, admissions and dues.

Conferees named by the Senate to work with the House representatives are Senators Smoot, Utah; McLean, Connecticut, and Reed, Pennsylvania, Republicans; Simmons, North Carolina, and Gerry, Rhode Island, Democrats.

Without a word of debate the House today formally disagreed to the Senate amendements to the bill. When Chairman Green asked unanimous consent that the bill be sent to conference, Representative Sosnowski (Rep.) of Michigan, who has advocated total repeal of the automobile tax instead of merely a reduction from 5 to 3 per cent as provided by the House, objected. The chairman then moved that the bill be sent to conference and it was immediately voted. Besides Green, the other House conferees will be Representative Hawley, Oregon, and Treadway, Massachusetts, Republicans, and Garner, Texas, and Collier, Mississippi, Democrats.

Income Tax Blanks for Returns on March 15 Sent Out.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The Treasury Department today sent out its first batch of income tax blanks for returns on March 15. The blanks were for incomes of $10,000 or less. This was done as the House and Senate both agreed upon lower rates, which are as follows:

An increase in the personal exemptions from the income tax from $1000 to $1500 for single persons and from $2500 to $3500 for married persons, which will relieve 2,300,000 Federal taxpayers of all taxes.

Reduction of the normal income tax rates from 2 to 1½ per cent on the first $4000 of taxable income; from 4 to 3 per cent on the next $4000 and from 6 to 5 per cent on the remainder.

An increase from $10,000 to $20,000 in the amount of income on which the 25 per cent reduction on account of "earned income" may be applied.

Match Boxes Cause Skin Disease

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, Feb. 15.—"Match box inflammation" is the name given a newly diagnosed skin disease. Physicians of the University of Berlin clinic say it is caused by carrying boxes of matches in trouser pocket. It appeared to be eczema on the thighs of men led to an investigation. It was found that the phosphorus sandpaper on the sides of the match boxes vaporized under the heat of the body and penetrated the skin.
